An Explanation on Principles

by Minowani

AN EXPLANATION ON PRINCIPLES

WITH TRANSLATIONS FROM THE PĀḶI

BY MINOWANI

PUBLISHED ON THE WEB
WORK IN PROGRESS

Prefix

This document contains the posts on minowani.github.io, for offline reading.

Contents

About 1

I. Bits and Pieces 2

A Marble Floor 3
Ājīva 4
Ākiñcañña 5
Anicca 7
Ariyasāvaka 10
Avijjā 12
Bhava 14
Brahmavihārā 15
Citta 19
Dhamma 21
Dhātu 22
Dripping Soap 23
Dukkha & Suffering 24
Jhāna & Āyatana 25
Kamma 28
Kāyānupassī 29
Letting Go 30
Mahābhūtā 31
Māna 33
Mind is Matter 35
Nibbāna 37
Nīvaraṇā 38
Opportunity 42
Parimukhaṃ 43

Perfections 44
Rebirth & Reincarnation 45
Sabbe Dhammā Anattā 47
Saddhā 49
Samphappalāpa 50
Saṅkappa 52
Saṅkhārā 53
Sati 54
Sīla 58
Sitting Cross-Legged 59
Taking Refuge 62
The Threefold Training 63
Three Types of Dukkha 66
Vipassanā 68

II. Threads 69
A Certain Clergyman (SN 12.46) 70
A Concise Catechism (MN 44) 72
A World Question (SN 35.82) 82
An Almsman (SN 46.5) 84
Ānanda 1st (SN 54.13) 85
Arising of View (AN 2.126-127) 93
Attendances of Meditation (AN 4.274) 94
Becoming 1st (AN 3.77) 95
Calm plus Understanding (AN 2.32) 97
Calm plus Understanding (SN 43.2) 98
Cessation of Action (SN 35.146) 99
Characteristics of the Inclined (AN 3.47-48) 101

Characteristics of not Self (SN 22.59) 102
Clergyman Uṇṇābha (SN 48.42) 106
Concentration (SN 45.28) 108
Consumed (SN 22.79) 109
Crying (AN 3.108) 114
Cultivations of Concentration (AN 4.41) 115
Dependent-Co-Arising (SN 12.1) 117
Division (SN 12.2) 119
Division (SN 45.8) 123
Division (SN 47.40) 126
Emptiness, concise (MN 121) 128
Forerunner (AN 1.56-57) 134
From Another Tradition (AN 3.69) 135
Hell and Heaven 1st (AN 10.211) 138
Mass of Timber (AN 6.41) 142
Masses (SN 22.48) 143
Masses (SN 56.13) 145
Meditative (SN 47.2) 147
Meditative (SN 47.35) 149
Moḷiyaphagguna (SN 12.12) 150
Noble Way (AN 10.145) 153
Noble Way (AN 10.189) 154
Not Exists (SN 24.5) 155
Not of You (SN 12.37) 158
Not what would be considered (AN 4.77) 160
Obstacles, Obstructions (SN 46.38) 161
One Principle (SN 54.1) 164
Path (SN 12.3) 166

Penetrative (AN 6.63) 168
Restraint (AN 4.14) 176
Rise (SN 47.42) 178
Sāriputta and Koṭṭika 1st (SN 44.3) 179
Scope (AN 4.233) 181
Seven Aspects (SN 14.11) 183
Situation 1st (AN 3.112) 185
Spike (SN 36.6) 187
Successive Cessations (AN 9.31) 190
Suffering (SN 12.43) 191
Taking up (SN 12.52) 193
The Eastern Gatehouse (SN 48.44) 195
The Eastern Park I (SN 48.45) 197
This Shining Mind (AN 1.51-52) 198
Timbaruka (SN 12.18) 199
To be Concluded (SN 1.3) 202
To be Viewed (SN 36.5) 203
Two Happinesses (AN 2.66) 204
Two Powers (AN 2.13) 205
Uncultivated (AN 1.23-24) 207
Upavāna (AN 4.175) 208
Uptakable (SN 22.121) 210
Vajirā (SN 5.10) 211
Vipassī (SN 12.4) 213
Vision for Knowledge (AN 1.45-46) 219
With Thoughts plus With Thinking (SN 43.3) 221
Wrongness (AN 10.103) 222
Yokeable (SN 22.120) 223

Yokes (AN 10.13) 224

III. Glossary 225

Pāḷi-English 226

About

Welcome to this site, which I started to host Knowing, originally a talk basically on dependent-co-arising. Since I am not a writer, nor is English my native language, there are no doubt a lot of grammar and style issues. And a home for Knowing should allow me to make the updates swiftly and with ease, that is why I started the site. Over time there were some points I liked to address, some questions I did answer, which led to more content. Unlike Knowing there is no real order to read them in, just pick what piques your interest.

Where I refer to 'the texts' it refers to the Aṅguttara Nikāya (AN), Saṃyutta Nikāya (SN), Majjhima Nikāya (MN), Dīgha Nikāya (DN) which are leading here; the Pāḷi that is. And where I refer to 'the dictionary' it refers to the 'The Pali Text Society's Pali-English Dictionary'.

Should you have any questions, found errors, or just want to discuss, feel free to contact me: minowani on @tutanota.com.

May these be of aid on your journey to come to understand the principle for yourself.

Minowani,
12 November, 2026

I. Bits and Pieces

A Marble Floor

Suppose a friend is helping you clean your newly bought house. While you head to the store for some supplies your friend starts with the hallway floor. It is an old nice looking marble floor and after cleaning it your friend takes a break.

When you return, and start to clean the same floor your friend tells you that they had just cleaned it. But when you explain that the marble is actually white and what was taken as the pattern was in fact dirt your friend might look at it differently. Especially after seeing that with the proper cleaning tools these "patterns" do indeed come off. So now your friend understands what should have be done, right? When they didn't see the floor as white there was no problem seen in leaving the stains as they were.

It is the same with the mind really. In "This Shining Mind (AN 1.51-52)" we find these texts:

> 'This shining, almsmen, mind. OK and that stained from visiting stains, that not having learned the commoner essentially does not fathom. From that not having learned, I say 'cultivation of mind does not exist for the commoner'.'

> 'This shining, almsmen, mind. OK and that cleared from visiting stains, that having learned the hearer of what is noble essentially does fathom. From that having learned, I say 'cultivation of mind does exist for the hearer of what is noble'.'

So in this way it is not a statement about the mind being beautiful as it is, perfect in its nature, that it only needs to be observed or anything like that. A clean floor is after all still a floor. With the dirty floor it was about not seeing dirt as dirt and thus lacking the knowledge, effort, skill, interest, to attain to the job of cleansing.

Ājīva

Ājīva is often translated as livelihood.

And it certainly has to do with livelihood; in the texts particulars of ājīva very often includes jobs. But also found are things like: 'With right doing, right ājīva; with wrong doing, wrong ājīva'. Thus a foolish person has despite their livelihood the wrong ājīva. So to put less emphasis on income, let's look for an alternative.

Jīva means life and with ā as prefix we can look at it as with ācāra:

> Ācāra [ā + car] way of conduct

With [ā+jīva] we then get way of life. That a foolish person would have despite their livelihood a wrong way of life makes sense. And it does connect:

With right view, right attitude; with right attitude, right speech; with right speech, right doing; with right doing, right way of life.

Pāḷi-English

> Ājīva [ā+jīva] way of life.

Ākiñcañña

Ākiñcañña is often translated as nothingness.

The dictionary says:

> Ākiñcañña (nt.) [abstr. fr. akiñcana] state of having nothing, absence of (any) possessions; nothingness (the latter as philosophical).

"Nothingness", stating that nothing really exists, is nihilism, a wrong view. And as for 'state of having nothing, absence of any possessions' perhaps possessionlessness could do, however that is not quite how ākiñcañña is used in the texts, as there the context seems to be about emptying. So let's look into this.

With emptying, emptiness, a previous 'something' on the foreground was due to the lack of interest demoted where it then fell away from the present perception. A previous 'something' does thus not exist in the present perception as it was emptied of that.

This we see quite often for example as with the ardent aware meditator who would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world. With the worries and concern about the world gone, the interest is gone, the world is gone. Or as with "Emptiness, concise (MN 121)" where first the men were gone, then the village, then the forest, then the earth, then endless air and so on. It is the reference to these objects which is gone what for the mediator makes the object gone.

And this not only goes for a particular 'something' but it also applies to the general 'something'. SN 40.7 shows that by drawing back from all 'somethings' the notion is 'not exists something' (natthi kiñcīti). But as perception has not ceased it must then mean it is 'without object'. So a perception has an object till, also by emptying, it is without.

If perception is, but without an object, it means that this 'without an object' itself then is what remains as base (as this is what is perceived). Next, by withdrawing from there we can't say there is no perception, withdrawing is a matter of perception, and we can't say there is perception as it went beyond any 'objects' and beyond 'without an object'. What then remains is 'neither perception nor no perception' as base.

A base is a base for touch. Thus has cognition not ceased, has touch not ceased, have feelings not ceased, has perception not ceased. So "nothingness" won't do and possesionlessness is besides the point. We can call 'without an object' objectless, then for the state we get to use objectlessness:

> '... with objectlessness as base, perception of endless cognition as base has ceased; with neither perception nor no perception as base, perception of objectlessness as base has ceased ... '.

Pāḷi-English

> Ākiñcaññā (nt.) objectlessness.

Anicca

Anicca is often translated as impermanence.

You may have seen it in a sequence that roughly goes like this:

Q1: Is form permanent or impermanent?
A1: Impermanent.
Q2: What is impermanent is that suffering or happiness?
A2: Suffering.
Q3: Is of that sound to say 'this is me, this I am, this is myself'?
A3: It isn't.

A3 might be clear if it is understood that if form were you, yours, yourself, it would be possible to have your form however you would like; it would certainly not be a liability to suffering. And for Q1 you might find a reason to give the same answer as given in A1. However, A2 is then not evident at all. Which means the opposite would then be valid too which is clearly not the intent here. This then must have something to do with the translation of anicca. So, let's look into this.

Let's start by making two groups. Group A for impermanence and kindred words, and group B for some other options.

Now for group A. Many people already know that form is not permanent. And what is their answer to this? 'Live life to its fullest! Enjoy while it lasts!' The negatives and the positives are seen as inevitable parts of life and one can only try to get as much of the positives as one can. And if they take this statement of things being impermanent to heart they would be able to accept that there is no magical potion to make them everlasting, nor such a favour to expect from a god, or from scientists finding a scientific solution. They won't have to worry about those things to exist and thus can they focus with an even lesser reserve to live their life to its fullest. So the effect this impermanence has is not one that makes people want to turn away. Thus is the answer to the second question not evident at all, which means that the sequence has become invalid.

Then for group B, let me explain it like this: Suppose you have in another country a family vacation home where you and your family are staying. And since working on the building is part of your family's fun the house is entirely made out of untreated wood. So if someone comes along to tell you that it is impermanent you can agree to it, even if you don't know what the remark was exactly about. Was it that the house won't survive for generations? or woodworms? or was it that you can't stay there long-term? It is after all not a permanent residence. In any case you can agree to it so you gave it a thumbs up. But suppose this person was an official and your reaction was not what he expected. Figuring his English wasn't good enough he signs his colleague to help him out. And you learn that apparently, because of old minings and the recent earthquakes, the area has become very unstable and an evacuation alert was given. Would you now enjoy your stay like there is no tomorrow or would you take your loved ones and evacuate? Why? Because the liability to suffering is evident. It doesn't matter to much if the experience is an enjoyable one or not, preferable it is, but safety first! In the dictionary unstable is also found for anicca and now 'sufferingly' as answer to the question now translated as 'Is what is unstable sufferingly or happily?' is evident.

Perhaps it might seem that the question 'Is form stable or unstable?' has a similar problem; why not answer it like 'Sometimes stable, sometimes unstable'? If so, what do you think, would it be better to validate something as stable at face value or after investigation? So then, what makes it that f.i. a house is unstable? What you'll arrive at is its support. And thus we need to look at the stableness of that support. Anything that is supported by something which isn't stable, is not stable either. Now form is inclined. And what are the characteristics of the inclined? There is the arising, passing and the alteration when stood. And as these characteristics are also inclined, they too arise ... etc. Looking at it this way we can see why this situation must collapse; the whole structure is unstable.

So the difference between these groups is not that innocent; group A is about existence through time, about views connect with eternalism and nihilism thus in time, while group B is about what is without time (akālika); structural. The now valid sequence can be read as follows:

> 'What is unstable that is sufferingly, what is sufferingly that is not self and is thus not to be regarded as 'this is me, this I am, this is my self'.'

Pāḷi-English

> Anicca (adj.) unstable.

Ariyasāvaka

Ariyasāvaka is often found translated as noble disciple.

It is a compound formed with the words ariya and sāvaka. Ariya is said to refer to the generally approved and esteemed customs and ideals of the Aryan clans, covering the racial, social and ethical aspects translated as noble. And sāvaka is translated as disciple.

Noble disciple seems to indicate the disciple as the noble one, but note that in this context for an arahant 'sāvaka' is being used, not ariyasāvaka, which then makes this a little odd; first to regard one as noble and then not. And ironically it makes some wonder who exactly is when noble.

Another rendering is disciple of the noble one(s). At least here people can be disciples without worrying about their status as nobility, but again for the arahant 'sāvakā' is being used, so this too does not fit.

Both translations leave some oddness when trying to assign noble to a certain person. But noble here stood for the social and ethical direction. So it was about the learning/following the good, the highest, righteousness; all of those traits for which aryan stood example. And for this generalization we then get to use 'nobleness'. A monastic is here not a noble one, a virtuous one is here not a noble one, the exalted one is here not a noble one, and the dhamma is here not noble (after all there are unwholesome dhammā) but nobleness is and noble principles are.

So then, disciple of nobleness? But what exactly would that mean? The word disciple implies a certain relationship and since nobleness is an abstract word it leaves this ambiguous. So, let's look at sāvaka as well.

The dictionary says:

> Sāvaka [fr. śru] a hearer, disciple.

Hearers have a long standing relation with oral traditions. And here we do not have the problem as with disciple. So then for ariyasāvaka we can have 'hearer of nobleness', as in hearer of the good. Even when the exalted ones' words are long gone one can set certain things as higher, nobler. Not to admire but to advance to; thus as to undertake, as practise. Advancing this way keeps siding with the good. And when the dhamma is discovered then it is set as the new highest. So as principle this fits as well.

Now noble is inclined for nobleness; again it is not a person who is noble but rather the nobleness of what is noble. And of what is noble that a hearer gets to be educated about. The ariyasāvaka and arahant are both sāvakā (hearers, hearers of the exalted one's word). Since the arahant is done with going, siding, that direction towards the good, that undertaking, the education, does not apply. This way it can be understood why an arahant does not need to be referred to as ariyasāvaka.

So we can use either 'hearer of nobleness' or 'hearer of what is noble', both say the same but perhaps the least abstract version makes it more clear. Then a line could go something like this:

'OK here, almsmen, having learned, the hearer of what is noble pays attention ...'

Pāḷi-English

> Ariya (adj. — n.) noble.
> — sāvaka hearer of what is noble.

Avijjā

Avijjā is often translated as ignorance.

I take avijjā to mean not knowing but that is not why this post is made. In "Division (SN 12.2)" this is said of avijjā:

> 'dukkhe aññāṇaṃ, dukkhasamudaye aññāṇaṃ, dukkhanirodhe aññāṇaṃ, dukkhanirodhagāminiyā paṭipadāya aññāṇaṃ, ayaṃ vuccati bhikkhave avijjā'

Which with ignorance for avijjā and not knowing for aññāṇa translates to something like this:

> 'Not knowing suffering, not knowing the arising of suffering, not knowing the cessation of suffering, not knowing the way going to the cessation suffering; this is called ignorance'.

However, rightly or wrongly, ignorance is often seen as linked to ignoring, and this then is used, in answering questions or in a discussion to point out your fault; not seldom seen together with your ego. A show stopper if you don't want to be rude; to continue to inquire would just be affirming what was just stated.

That ignorance is differently understood may have little to do with the Pāḷi, so we are free to look for synonyms. We can use the same pair where it doesn't matter how ignorance is seen.

Aññāṇa = a + ñāṇa = lack of knowledge = ignorance. And as for a link with ignoring: Perhaps you have already seen people asking whether or not it is about suffering because that is not their experience at all, or that it isn't about suffering but about happiness, or about unsatisfactoriness or stress. People don't tend to like talking about sickness, death, suffering and try to avoid or soften it. Not wanting to look into suffering, they thus turn a blind eye to it. And there on that level lies the ignoring. So ignorance then forms a basis for this not knowing. Thus:

> 'What is the ignorance about suffering, ignorance about the rise of suffering, ignorance about the cessation of suffering, ignorance about the way going to the cessation of suffering; this is called, almsmen, not knowing.'

And now answering a question with 'because you don't know' would be a mood point to make. In the context of dependent-co-arising it wasn't about your ignorance or you don't know' in the first place, but in any case the discussion should now go a little different. To counter the lack of knowledge you should get yourself informed. So don't feel pressured to stop the questioning by the 'because of your ignorance/ego' arguments.

Pāḷi-English

> Aññāṇa (nt.) ignorance.
> Avijjā (f.) not knowing.

Bhava

Bhava is often translated as becoming, existence.

It is the support for birth. If there is no existence there is no birth, but that is not exactly what it is here about as this is more of an abstract denial; an assumed nothingness. Becoming fits, though it can do with a small explanation.

There are three becomings, which we are already familiar with:

1. becoming by lust (kāmabhavo)
2. becoming by form (rūpabhavo)
3. becoming by 'without form' (arūpabhavo)

Lust is a passional attitude. When not open to lust there yet can be passion for form and for the without form (perceptions beyond form). And so there can be higher and lower principles to attend to. Becoming by higher principles is esteemed higher, one might end up in higher places, and if we let ourselves in with lower principles we set things up to end up in lower places.

Becoming by lust doesn't mean that there is then no form, so it involves more of an orientation, direction, grow: If we don't have passion for the same things, we then don't long for the same things, we then don't take the same things on board, we are then not becoming ("growing", "orienting") along the same things, and so we might not end up at same places.

But, thus so:

'With support of taking up, becoming. With support of becoming, birth'.

Pāḷi-English

> Bhava becoming.

Brahmavihārā

Mettā, karuṇā, muditā and upekkhā are called the four brahmavihārā, often translated as divine abodes or abidings, sublime attitudes, abodes of Brahma.

Brahma is according to the texts the name of a higher god and vihāra means dwelling, as we are already used seeing viharati in 'On one occasion the exalted one dwells', so we can call it 'dwellings of Brahma'. If one acts like Brahma, have a mindset like Brahma, then one might end up in such situation. MN 96 says this goes for anyone. So both commoners and trainees can end up in heavens. The principles for these are seen as godly, divine, saintly, holy and are thus higher than what people usually would cultivate or aim for (see also "Ariyasāvaka").

While brahmavihāra is hardly ever used in the texts SN 54.11 shows that the concentration from meditation on the in plus out breathe is also a brahmavihāra. Thus the brahmavihāra are not the four, but the four are brahmavihārā. It is a dwelling from a higher principle what makes a dwelling Brahma's dwelling (see also "Bhava"). But as just these four are grouped, not another number nor another combination, there must be a reason to do so. Let's go into this.

Mettā

Mettā is often found translated as loving-kindness, benevolence, goodwill. The dictionary links it with love. From the texts like "From Another Tradition (AN 3.69)" we know mettā goes against hate. And love and hate are a famous pair. But love doesn't quite fit as it is a bit ambiguous. Perhaps then kindness and the lot got being used but they too don't quite fit. The Pāḷi might have different words for what we see here as ambiguous and thus this might not be the case there. This then gives us some playing room. So, back to love. Love differs from loving, which differs from to be in love, which differs from lover, and so there is this range with love which may or may not quite fit. But if I say 'lovingness' it is already understood differently as it is a quality of mind which is more about indicating care out of love. A mind filled with lovingness? Well, why not? Lovingness fits just fine.

Karuṇā

Karuṇā is often translated as compassion. It is said to mean pity, compassion and sometimes we can find sympathy. MN 62 shows it gives up vihesā which can mean fright. The dictionary gives a whole range for vihesā, including harm, cruelty (perhaps as cause) but for now we don't need to look further into this. However, when the texts talk about compassion the Pāḷi word is anukampa and not karuṇā. And another problem, at least that I have with it, is that pity, compassion, sympathy depend on someone else's misfortune. So they may be good qualities but is it what is meant here? The Brahma quality we could take as having a mind like Brahma, is higher than that of many other gods. So a good quality in itself doesn't mean it is high enough to be considered Brahma's. And such a divine mind, what could it entail? We already have lovingness and we have to come up with three more. But as there is not much to go by let's continue with the other two first to see if this helps sorting things out.

Muditā

Muditā is often translated as empathetic or appreciative joy. The dictionary says it has to do with soft-heartedness, kindliness, sympathy. However, in AN 3.96 we find that muditā is when there is no quarrelling, when the company is in unity, that it is as milk blending with water. And AN 6.113 shows it goes against arati of which the dictionary says it is something like dislike, discontent, aversion. So what is described here is a situation where people seem to be in some sort of agreement, where things blend nicely together, which just describes what harmony is. And to dwell in harmony, wouldn't that be divine?

Upekkhā

Upekkhā is often translated as equanimity. Equanimity can be used to indicate an evenness of mind, balance, calmness. MN 62 shows it gives up friction. It is used describing the third and fourth radiance "Division (SN 45.8)". To me it is about the viewpoint to how things are seen, from objectiveness, rather than that indicating a mental state. Upekkhā is said to come from upa (near, upon, by, above) and ikkha (to see, to look) and meaning "looking from above"; thus from taking a distance. And objectiveness does cover a balanced or impartial aspect. That by stepping back, at a greater distance, things can be looked at more objectively, and more clearly, is something we do understand. First we get to look at the world objectively and so turn away from it, and then from the radiances on we are getting to look objectively at aspects we consider to be of ourselves. To not to take everything to heart, not take everything personal, but to act and look at things from a certain objectiveness, doesn't that already look saintly like?

Back to Karuṇā

So far then we got lovingness, karuṇā, harmony, objectiveness. Doesn't there seem to be a certain cadence to it? A gradual stilling or a going higher? Then we could say that by stepping back from lovingness we would get to karuṇā; by stepping back from karuṇā, harmony; by stepping back from harmony, objectiveness. And this then could be a reason why they are bounded, as the group of four. As there is not much to go by we now have to make an estimate guess for karuṇā. If possible I would like to stay somewhat in the range of compassion, pity but without the misfortune part as they lean on unwholesome principles which have here already been dealt with. So we are looking for something which has greater distance to lovingness. As we are talking about principles it must be possible to see traces of this in every days' usage too. And we can see people who say they are in love, which involves lovingness, can fall out of it. And if we stay at the good side of things it can be that a certain amiability or friendship remains. Which does indicate a greater distance. And of karuṇā the dictionary indicates to compare it with the Vedic karuṇa nt. (holy) action. So perhaps kindness then, as in acting out of kindness? A mind filled with kindness, wouldn't that be anything deity like?

Mettā, Karuṇā, Muditā, Upekkhā

Lovingness, kindness, harmony, objectiveness. This now flows, right? Yoked to these higher principles, beyond the human norm, where else than beyond the human world could cognition be established. The brahmavihārā are hardly mentioned in the texts but by making use of them we were able to find a translation for karuṇā. The texts do talk about the four apart from them as dwellings of Brahma. As in first getting rid of the unwholesome principles and then promote this goodness (lovingness, kindness, harmony, objectiveness) thus as right exertion. And with right exertion, right meditation, with right meditation, right concentration.

Pāḷi-English

> Brahmavihārā dwellings of Brahma.
> Mettā (f.) lovingness.
> Karuṇā (f.) kindness.
> Muditā (f.) harmony.
> Upekkhā (f.) objectiveness.

Citta

In the Pāḷi texts different words are used which in English are often translated as mind. Those words are said to be synonyms. However their specific usage is consequently applied and I like to keep those distinctions.

It is a bit like when a countryman asks you where you are from, and you might answer with a towns name. But when you are in another country and a local asks you where you are from, you might answer with a country name or, if you are from a well known city, the name of the city. It does depend on the context, and it does mean sometimes all can be used, but it doesn't mean they are synonyms. To me it is similar with mind.

Mind is used for citta, ceto, mano and viññana:

Citta

When we talk about body and mind, as duo, they are referred to in Pāḷi as kāya and citta; so let's then reserve mind for citta.

Ceto

Ceto is connected to the feeling side for which we can use mentality, 'the heart'. With then cetasika (belonging to ceto) as mental, like f.i. a mental feeling. In "A Concise Catechism (MN 44)" we find:

> Saññā ca vedanā ca cetasikā, ete dhammā cittappaṭibaddhā.
> 'And perception and feeling are mental, these principles are bound to mind.'

Mano

Mano seems to be associated with doing, the acting side (e.g. manokamma), as in 'thinking-mind', 'doing-mind', for which we can use intellect, 'the head'.

Viññana

And for viññana we can use cognition, from the Latin cognoscere ('to know'). In "Consumed (SN 22.79)" we find:

> Vijānātīti kho, bhikkhave, tasmā 'viññāṇan'ti vuccati.
> 'OK it cognises, almsmen, from that it is called cognition.'

One for All

It is a bit difficult to map these Pāḷi words with English where these distinctions may not that strictly be used. Intellect might feel a bit off when taken on as (being) intellectual, likewise mentality and (being) mental, while for some mentality might be more related to thinking than feeling. Anyhow here we can use them just as distinctions of mind; Mind, Mind-that-undergoes, Mind-that-does and Mind-that-cognises. And so, mind (citta) can be used for cognition (viññana) when it is about to cognise, or for intellect (mano) when the emphasis lies on intention, or mentality when it is about emotion, but neither ceto nor mano contains viññana; they are not that freely exchangeable. To me it is like this:

Mind (citta) = mentality (ceto) + intellect (mano) + cognition (viññana).

Pāḷi-English

> Ceto (nt.) mentality.
> Citta (nt.) mind.
> Mano (nt.) intellect.
> Viññana (nt.) cognition.

Dhamma

Dhamma can be found translated as norm, law, nature, law of nature, teaching, doctrine, phenomena, qualities ...

Translations for dhamma can sometimes be found in glossaries yet they may not get used in the texts themselves that way; this tends to make things a bit abstract and unclear. It can also have different translations in texts or be omitted which makes it not directly recognisable either, but it is just a word which would be ordinarily used by ordinarily people. By making it vague it is so abstract any-thing might do, yes even a thing.

And what makes a thing a thing? What is the thing-ness in thing? If you ponder on this you might perhaps find that this thing-ness is based on a 'blueprint', a law, nature... so thus a principle. And that is what dhamma means; principle. The teaching is a principle; a teaching is based on principles, it teaches principles. Law of nature; a principle. A basic truth; a principle. The essence of something; a principle. A theory or belief; a principle. No morals; no principles.

All those different words used in the translations for dhamma, can be substitute with one word: principle. It clarifies and makes it directly recognisable.

Pāḷi-English

> Dhamma (m. nt.) principle.

Dhātu

Dhātu is often translated as element.

Element has the problem that it can easily be taken the wrong way, as a chemical element or organic substance. While when I say ‘there is an element of danger to it’ it is immediately understood differently. And there are there of attractive, unattractive, etc. e.g. "Mass of Timber (AN 6.41)". To avoid the misunderstanding, better use aspect instead.

Pāḷi-English

> Dhātu (f.) aspect.

Dripping Soap

In AN 5.28 we find a comparison that roughly goes like this:

> '... There isn't anything, from all of the body, not spread with the from the withdrawal-borne pleasantness and happiness. Just as, almsmen, or an able barber or an able barber's apprentice would knead, in a bronze dish, bathing powders with water, sprinkling around and around finishing a ball from oil, affected with oil, from the inside and outside spread with oil and does not drip.'

I have always been intrigued by the last part of not dripping. Why would this be a concern? If you spread out pleasantness and happiness through and through, all over, why would dripping be a concern? Suppose you would paint a whole room white, from top to bottom, ceiling, walls, floor everything; why would dripping on the floor then matter? Not making such a mess that it piles up, just dripping. Besides... how would one even drip pleasantness and happiness?!

Today I washed my hands in a very tiny washing basin; the soap is on a shelf on another wall. So I wet my hands (closed the crane), picked up the soap, turned it in my hands a few times and was about to put it back when I noticed the soap water dripping. I turned the soap around a few times more, which made this soap water a bit thicker, so it wouldn't drip when put back. Then I thought about this text. The not dripping is not about not splashing it everywhere all around, it means it is to thin to work with; it can't be put in good use because it falls away. And it needs more of the same work first, to make it thicker, to be able to put it into good use.

Because of the oily ball part in the text the instruction itself was not lost (to thin and the ball itself would fall apart). 'Establish it' or 'Establish it, else it is not workable' do not differ in what to do. And there are other texts stating the same. Thus though it was not an issue, it is fun seeing this clarified.

Dukkha & Suffering

'Is dukkha not unsatisfactoriness rather than suffering?'

A treatment for an accidental early discovered severe sickness is not for the not yet manifested symptoms. It doesn't matter if we don't feel sick right now. Thinking a treatment would be just for that would be a misunderstanding.

Unsatisfactoriness and suffering (bearing of pain) are as scales of the same metric system and when entertained, untreated, symptoms like birth, ageing, dying, separated from loved ones, captivity, slaughter, torture are guaranteed; which is why birth should not be even approved of (SN 5.6).

And a translation should do just to all this. Since the noble way is the antidote, suffering is a proper and more beneficial translation. In other words, this clergy conduct could be seen as an overkill for mere unsatisfactoriness, which also lacks the sense of urgency suffering has.

Pāḷi-English

> Dukkha (adj. — n.) suffering.

Jhāna & Āyatana

According to the texts there are, when it comes to successive cessations, four radiances (jhānā) and four bases (āyatanā). A popular take is to see the bases as "formless jhānā". But has this got any merit?

So, what is the difference between a radiance and a base?

The texts don't seem to explain, this might be the case when things are self explanatory. So let's look at it that way. And let's aim for their difference as the texts do not talk about the bases as (arūpa) jhānā.

The dictionary says:

> Jhāna (nt.) [from jhāyati] conflagration, fire.

To almsmen was the advise to do jhāna. And there is the 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th one. So fire or conflagrate do grammatically not quite work but let's keep the connection with fire in mind. Outside the texts is it is said that it is about the burning of "defilements" and let's look into this first.

A feeling of happiness has passion dormant, a feeling of suffering has friction dormant and a feeling of neither happiness nor suffering has not knowing dormant. But the thing is, not all feelings must have them. And which ones have not? Those in the radiances, "A Concise Catechism (MN 44)". Thus before entering a jhāna have these obstructions already been dealt with. Gone is absent it doesn't mean they are barren. They can here become barren, but this goes for the arahant (AN 9.36). It is then not that radiances in themselves burn the "defilements" away, and it is not self explanatory as the bases carry this same feature, yet are not called jhāna. Thus was the burning here not helpful. So let's look for a difference.

Āyatanā means base, and a base is a base for touch. Just as with the hexad base. These bases here can be gone through sequentially. These radiances here can be gone through sequentially. Both through engagement with perception. Both have a certain perception falling away. But unlike these bases these radiances also have something else falling away. For example when engaged in the fourth radiance inhaling and exhaling have ceased. So here is a difference, let's see if it helps to point them out as being different things.

Before the perception of endless air there is a perception of form and from that point on the perceptions are without form. But is there form or isn't there? Suppose I want to read a certain book which can only be read in the library, then I must enter the library. After some reading I close the book and leave the story behind, which says something of what I am perceiving. I did not physically enter and exit the book and I am still at the library too, but the story is then not on my mind. But I could say that by reading the book I left the library, which just means I got into the story. If I take another book but it is not of my interest at all, I have not left the library and not entered the book. So from a first person point of view, when fully emerged in the story, is there then a book? and is there then a library? Thus talking about leaving one perception for another doesn't justify them to be similar things (library, book, story).

With the engagement in the forth radiance the perception of form falls away; thus are radiances with form rūpa. Arūpa means without form. Air (ākāsa) can be seen as the space above the ground so to speak, like sky, which then have no form here as it is a matter of perception. And based on what is this perception? Based on a view from earth; thus from form. So with leaving form endless air becomes the base. And thus have we here something similar going on as with library, book and story. And therefore can a base not be a radiance, as arūpa jhāna (without form yet with form) is a contradiction.

And as for the connection with fire?

It seems that in ancient times fire was seen as having to do with clean, purification, and symbolizing life. So perhaps could jhāna back then be more easily understood. Maybe we can say that without lust there is just pure form as media to reflect from; to shine or radiate from.

Kamma

Kamma is often translated as action.

It has a different meaning outside which finds its way in but the Pāḷi word translates as action. And action is intentional, it is not a mere motion "Penetrative (AN 6.63)":

> 'Cetanāhaṃ, bhikkhave, kammaṃ vadāmi. Cetayitvā kammaṃ karoti kāyena vācāya manasā.'

> 'Herewith intention, almsmen, the action I say. Intending the action, one does by body, by speech, by intellect'.

We can only do something just now and of course, what we do leads to result; we do something precisely because of an expected result. That the exact 'result', the ripening of an action, is not found out is one thing, "Not what would be considered (AN 4.77)", but that there is ripening that is to be understood. Action is not a matter of believing.

Do yourself a favour and don't use kamma but use action instead so that a misunderstanding is more easily spotted by and for yourself.

Pāḷi-English

> Kamma (nt.) action.

Kāyānupassī

In "Attendances of Meditation (AN 4.274)" we find:

> 'Idha, bhikkhave, bhikkhu kāye kāyānupassī viharati ātāpī sampajāno satimā vineyya loke abhijjhādomanassaṃ.'

> 'Here, almsmen, an almsman looking into body dwells in body as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world.'

If you watch television, you can dwell in it. If you look at the past, you can dwell in it. But not while you keep track of your current surrounding. So in order to dwell in them this surrounding will have to make room first. And how it this done? By loosing interest in it.

Like that; with the removal of avarice and discontentment, the interests and concerns about the world are gone and world disappears for one. What then remains to dwell in is in body, that is if what is looked into is body. Likewise we can dwell in feelings when what is looked into are feelings. So this text does not differ so much from other texts like "Emptiness, concise MN 121" thus with the perception of the world gone, the remaining non-emptiness is the perception of body, with the perception of body gone, the remaining non-emptiness is the perception of feelings ... mind ... principles. It is just this emptying, stepping back, withdrawal, gradual stilling.

Letting Go

Very often it can be heard one should not attach; one should let go.

I am not to found of this letting-go. Not that we should not let go, but without proper understanding I find it not to be to helpful. Often a very rigid letting-go is viewed. While there is the case were it can also be seen as no worries, relax, just let it go, which already make things lighter.

Perhaps a more beneficial approach is not to take it as an instruction but seeing it as a result from developing understanding. The more wisdom is developed the more letting-go will naturally follow. But it can work as a reminder. Before engaging or when separation sets in it can be handy to remind yourself it might not be worth the trouble to hang on to things-that-follow-their-own-agenda to such an extend they will cost you your own happiness. Letting your happiness depend on things you don't have control over might not be the wisest thing to do.

This letting-go is not seen as a form of a negative mood or so, quite the contrary. After all it is really about the letting go of greed, hate and delusion and thus is there then more room for kindness, generosity, compassion, etc. So just keep it light (loose) instead of heavy (attached). Be wise about it. Let it go ...

Mahābhūtā

Suppose we are looking at a red wooden chair. Here is red something we bring in as light just gets absorbed and reflected, which we here perceive as red. Despite this behaviour, of absorbing and reflecting, is what we perceive the way we express it "Penetrative (AN 6.63)". Wooden chair is also something which we bring in as wood has no notion of being intended to sit on; it just behaves as wood does. And as it is our experience, it is personal. It may not feel that way as perceptions are similar between species, and we can communicate about them which gives the impression of them being public. But it are just the aspects (of the behaviour) of form that are public and which found footing in our experience when picked up; which then became this "coloured form". Both, and the behaviour of form and the form picked up are called form "Division (SN 12.2)". Form consists of a mix of four primary behaviours, the great essences (mahābhūtā):

Earthiness (pathavī). Pathavī, says the dictionary, is expansion. It is used as earth, or earthiness if we talk about the behaviour; earth is from the earthiness. The behaviour of earth is that it takes up space. Like the planet, which is largely covered with water (udaka).

Fluidity (āpo). The behaviour of fluidity we can see with water (udaka) as ice, liquid water, vapour. And thus also accounts for certain surfaces which have a role in absorbing and reflecting light.

Heat (tejo). The behaviour of heat is that it allows for change. AN 5.197 shows that this aspect can disturb upper in the air (ākāsa) by which arisen clouds go away. So the weather changes, temperature change (the change is felt as warm, hot), ice can melt, liquids can vaporize, it can deform.

Turbulence (vāyo). Vāyo relates to wind (vāto). And the behaviour of wind is that it blows (vāti, vāyati). It is the movement, motion. Related to wind I call it turbulence.

The primary behaviours we thus see in earth (pathavī), water (udaka), fire (aggi) and wind (vāto), as each carries its distinguishing aspects more prominent. Apart from these, outer ones, there are also the inner ones as the body is of the four essences. Thus we see them more prominently represented f.i. as the earthiness in bones, heat in body heat, the fluidity in blood and turbulence as the winds in the belly.

The point is that these essences follow their own agenda, no matter how we would like them to be, no matter how we perceive them to be. All the changes we can make to them are already granted by them; it is already within their domain. The internal earth aspect, the aspect of earthiness, and the external earth aspect are just the earth aspect. Earth is earth through and through, idem for the others. And as their behaviour is always in accordance to their own domain they should not be seen as me, mine, myself, etc. But while the body isn't ours, the actions (kammā) with it are (SN 3.20).

Pāḷi-English

> Mahābhūta great essence.
> Pathavī (f.) earth, earthiness.
> Āpo (nt.) fluidity.
> Tejo (nt.) heat.
> Vāyo (nt.) turbulence.

Māna

Māna is often translated as conceit.

Of the ten yokes the first three are cut by one who undergoes the stream (sotāpanna), the first three cut and the next two are weakened by one who will be heading back once (sakadāgāmin), the first five are cut by one who will not be heading back (anāgāmin), and all ten by the one who is virtuous (arahant). Māna is in the second series of five, thus as long as one is not a virtuous one there is māna. Now conceit is excessive pride in oneself. But when we see someone acting selflessly would we then say this person is acting out of conceit? That feels a bit weird right? So how can we let this make sense?

'I was', 'I saw', 'I did', 'I want', 'I said', 'I feel', 'I think', ... if someone would use these in several sentences within a short period of time, we could think that this person is really full of him/her self. We could say that he/she is 'making it about him/her self' hence conceit. But suppose someone was asked a lot of questions like 'Where were you?', 'What did you see?', 'What did you do?', then answering them with 'I was', 'I saw', etc. wouldn't automatically mean this person must be full of him/her self. So, conceit is more about 'making it about you while it is not about you'. At undergoing the stream, heading-back-once and not-heading-back 'not self' (anattā) is understood, yet a sense of self is left (SN 22.89). And this sense of self is regarding things which are not self (the pañc'upādānakkhandhā), so this too is 'making it about self while it is not about self'. In this way it got the characteristics of conceit, hence conceit. Conceit, arrogance, pride, etc. are manifestations of this principle of conceit.

Having that said, the dictionary also shows that māna means honour, respect, and also measure. The English word which covers all three the meanings of māna is esteem of which the most subtlest form is the self-esteem 'I am' (asmimāna); which is a form of measurement. Thus not only does esteem seem to fit better, it also steers a bit away from selfishness or ego to which māna can be found reduced to. It might be that esteem can more easily be associated with holding, 'held in high esteem', and what can be held can be let go.

Pāḷi-English

> Māna esteem.

Mind is Matter

Some time ago I had my first few encounters with people claiming mind to be matter, as a product of the brain. I was then unaware of people having this view but the for me interesting part was to discover I had not questioned my own view on this matter at all. As long as I can remember I took for granted we have a mind, as the non-matter part of a being.

In support for their view they claimed to have gotten it from someone and asserted that with the right equipment we can see things lighting up in the brain, explained as the mind thus originating from the brain. Which to me is an odd conclusion. After all, what is looked at is matter, it is matter that is seen, how would this say anything about the non-matter part to begin with?

In terms of language mind and matter are two things, so there is that difference, but let's reason a bit further. If two things are the same, there must be some sameness, at least within a certain context. A house differs from a store, so these are two different things. But on a more general level we can say that as both are buildings; they can be seen as occurrences of a same thing. So we have two particulars (house & store) of a (more) general (building). A house differs from a cave and caves are not necessarily called buildings, so to see if they are particulars of a same thing we would have to go to a more general level. Then we might end up with something like shelters. In the end the highest form of generalization for matter are the aspects of earth, fluidity, heat and wind. These four great essences can be perceived and, to some extend, they can be shared; the tree I see can be seen by others too.

Thus if mind is matter then it must be possible to generalize it with these same qualities as well. So let's take anger for example. When we are angry we know that. But is it tangible? Visible (does light reflect)? Can it be tasted? Smelled or heard? Can it be shared? When someone is angry there often are signs to see but again, that is just the matter part not the anger itself. And it might become more difficult to sense things like knowledge, trustworthiness, and so on. We can see that any of those things do not behave what we know of matter to be like at all. Not discoverable through our five senses and not shareable, not having this sameness on a very general level, then thus not the same thing. And being totally different things they are then not derived from one another, to be with each other.

Now some might say 'Well, then it is all energy'. If energy is assumed to be an even more general level, then care should be taken because sooner or later we think of atoms, electrons, etc. which is just matter. It would then also be open to the view 'matter is mind' while 'mind is matter' is really meant to deny any non-matter in the first place. And if you are willing to let energy to be just an abstract, without anything concrete, then the question remains 'to what end?'

Stating that mind is matter is really implying something about life and death, which in the end forms an excuse of why we live our lives the way we do. How ever we understand life to be, that forms our justification. In a way we could say the awakened one did view a more general level, suffering, but then gave the antidote for it as well.

Nibbāna

Nibbāna is often left untranslated and/or is unclear.

Translations for nibbāna can sometimes be found in glossaries yet they may not be used in the texts. And extinction, extinguishing, unbinding don't make it clear enough. When translating nibbāna there are a few points to take into account:

- It is a word which would be ordinarily used by ordinarily people. People do have a perception of what nibbāna is even when they don't directly know it for themselves.
- It is seen as positive.
- It has to do with stilling, stopping, specifically regarding greed, hate and delusion.
- It is the highest goal; it comes after freedom, emancipation!

We can use peace for nibbāna. Let's check it against the points above:

- People know what peace is, even though they might not have experienced it directly or fully by themselves.
- Peace is seen as positive.
- It can be understood that with greed, hate and delusion there is no real peace.
- Freedom, but for what purpose? For doing what you like? Then you are not really free; a slave of desires. But for the ultimate peace? That surely is the highest!

Many questions about nibbāna are not that careful, because nibbāna has become an abstract. If instead of 'Is nibbāna not boring?', 'Is peace not boring?' was asked, it is easier to see that then peace would be lacking. So this translation clarifies and takes the points above into account as well.

Pāḷi-English

> Nibbāna (nt.) peace.

Nīvaraṇā

A popular translation for nīvaraṇā is hindrances.

Understand that they may not all feel as a hindrance to you; they are showstoppers to wisdom.

There are these five obstructions:

1. Kāmacchanda
2. Byāpāda
3. Thinamiddha
4. Uddhaccakukkucca
5. Vicikicchā

1. Kāmacchanda

Kāmacchanda is a compound of kāma (lust) and chanda (interest) and the interest in lust is what normally drives one to find happiness when engaged with the world, not when drawn back from it. It depends on improper attention to an indication of attractiveness (subhanimittaṃ). The more that keeps being fed, the more it grows. The analogy given in SN 46.55 is about a bowl of water mixed with various dyes which when used as a mirror gives a distorted view. Thus when open to it we get enchanted by all the beautiful colourings. When fed it consumes, obsesses, giving less room for more beneficial things. Under its influence we turn away from doing what is wise to do.

2. Byāpāda

Byāpāda is an obstruction which depends on an indication of friction (paṭighanimittaṃ). With improper attention it appears and develops. The analogy given is about a bowl of water heated up which when used as a mirror gives a distorted view. The more heated up we are the less room we give for wise things. Heated up, out of friction, is generally an image for the display of anger. So let's call it just that.

3. Thinamiddha

Thinamiddha is a compound of thīna + middha. The dictionary lists for thīna stiffness, obduracy, stolidity, indifference. And for middha torpor, stupidity, sluggishness. This obstruction gets fed by improper attention to things such as dislike, discontentment, weariness or sloth (tandī), yawning (vijambhikā), drowsiness after a meal (bhattasammado), sluggishness (līnattaṃ) of mind (SN 46.51). It pops up when the strengths (sight, hearing, etc.) are not held in check, when not wakeful, when not moderate in eating (AN 5.56). The analogy given is a bowl of water covered up with weeds which couldn't be used as a mirror. Weed takes time to grow so one had no interest and/or the energy in keeping it clear. Of the listed words for thīna indifference would fit, as the other items seem to describe aspects. But indifferent is a bit ambiguous as it is also understood as equanimity, neutrality or objectiveness; when there is not a strong preference. So I prefer apathy. Apathy is when one isn't interested due to absence of emotion or enthusiasm. Drowsiness after a meal then belongs to middha, for which we normally use tiredness, fatigue, lethargy. Being sleepy or hungry can make one lethargic, which is characterized by fatigue, drowsiness, lack of energy and alertness, and it is something to snap out of. So with lethargy it is clearer what it is about. SN 46.52 shows that this obstruction can be split two obstruction, thīna and middha, thus for thinamiddha we then have apathy plus lethargy.

4. Uddhaccakukkucca

Uddhaccakukkucca is a compound of uddhacca and kukkucca. Uddhacca is listed as agitation, excitement, distraction, flurry. And kukkucca with bad doing, bad character, remorse, scruple, flurry, worry, brooding. The analogy is a bowl of water being stirred which when used as a mirror would give a distorted view. And stirring up is what to excite or agitate is. This obstruction is fed by improper attention to things that bring no ease of mind (cetaso avūpasamo). SN 46.52 shows it can be split into these two as separate obstructions. Uddhacca is what you get when paying to much improper attention to an indication of energy, lifting, straining (paggahanimittaṃ). To excited; excitement. Kukuucca has quite a range in meaning while it is from improper attention to things that don't bring an ease of mind. It also seem to be linked with fruit-buds (AN 4.196). And brooding is the one word in the list with a link to offspring and with feeling uncomfortable, worried, as if something bad is going to happen. Hence for uddhaccakukkucca we can use excitement plus brooding.

5. Vicikicchā

Vicikicchā comes from vi+cikicchati, dis-reflect. The analogy says one can't use a bowl with muddy water in the dark as mirror. Thus a visual distinction can't be made. All look the same; without clarity, obscure, vague. When this as yoke is dealt with then there is that clarity and then there is no doubt (kankhā). With doubt things might not be so clear, but at least they are clear enough to have doubt about them; they can be seen or considered (there is just no certainty about them) but when vague, lacking distinction, then as such it isn't even considered, thus there is then not even doubt; unseen it will not be reflected on. Unclarity thus. This obstruction is fed by the improper attention to clarity lacking principles.

In Common

These five obstructions are all fed (to appear or grow) by improper attention:

- interest in lust, by improper attention to an indication of attractiveness.
- anger, by improper attention to an indication of friction.
- apathy plus lethargy, by improper attention to dislike, weariness, not moderate in eating, etc.
- excitement plus brooding, by improper attention to what brings no ease of mind.
- unclarity, by improper attention to clarity lacking principles.

And thus are with paying proper attention, e.g. when honestly studying the texts, the obstructions absent. "Obstacles, obstructions (SN 46.38)".

Pāḷi-English

> Nīvaraṇā obstructions.
> Kāmacchanda interest in lust.
> Byāpāda anger.
> Thinamiddha apathy plus lethargy.
> Uddhaccakukkucca excitement plus brooding.
> Vicikicchā unclarity.

Opportunity

In AN 8.29 Akkhaṇasuttaṃ we find people thinking the world had a chance, an opportunity, to benefit from the awakened one, because he was then there in the world.

But we find the awakened one stating people mistake his being in the world for an opportunity. Even with him there those in hell can't benefit, nor the animals, nor the ghosts, nor some certain gods, nor those living in regions where the awakened one's followers do not travel to, nor those living close enough but with to strong wrong views, nor those simply to dumb to understand. For those it is a miss.

There is also the case when a person is capable but the principle has not been made clear, then too it will be a miss. Thus with the principle made clear don't miss out on the opportunity; study the texts so once in a while.

Parimukhaṃ

Parimukhaṃ is used in the context of ānāpānasati, in the phrase 'parimukhaṃ satiṃ upaṭṭhapetvā', and is a compound with pari (around) and mukha (mouth, entrance). According to the dictionary pari also means '(lit.) away from, off' and mukha 'face, entrance, front, top'.

Ānāpānasati is a compound of ānāpāna and sati. Sati is meditation (see Sati) and ānāpāna is about the breathe (pāna) not breath (pāṇa [Vedic prāṇa]). Meditation is something we need to develop and here we hone this on the breathe.

We are told to be meditative on the breathe, knowing whether it is in or out and f.i. long or short, and while knowing this we train with body, feeling, mind and principles "One Principle (SN 54.1)". And parimukhaṃ describes this way of attending (upaṭṭhapetvā). We can describe it as 'away from the face', 'away from the front', 'around the front' to indicate what is at the centre of our attention and what at the side. What we need to train gets to be the foreground, the centre of our attention, while the meditative inhale and exhale then the background, as context it surrounds that, set to the sides. And this is covered by the word peripheral. With peripherally (parimukhaṃ) then being the adverb.

Pāḷi-English

> Parimukhaṃ (adv.) peripherally.

Perfections

Ever so now and then I hear about "the perfections" (pāramī) and I would like to make a general remark.

Hearing about "the perfections" some may feel they then understand what needs to be done. However when one understands what needs to be done then one underwent the stream, till then things are not quite so understood. Now more things are not clear till they are but a perfection has a ring to it of something pretty much flawless from each and every angle, or maxed-out; something quite out of reach. If you need to judge your own actions along what you consider to be perfect then it is seldom good enough.

To them I would emphasize the words good enough. Good enough for the goal gives some more room, air, right? Your behaviour does not have to be perfect, just good enough. Your concentration does not have to be perfect, just good enough. Your wisdom does not have to be perfect, just good enough.

This is not just a trick to get some air in. The pāramī are not found in the four Nikāyā, and in these texts we do see virtuous ones (arahants) behaving in a way which others saw as rude or careless etc. So to others it did not look like the perfect behaviour at all. We also see the virtuous ones differ in concentration. Some had supernatural abilities, others not, yet their concentration was developed good enough. Likewise there were differences in wisdom, yet the developed wisdom was good enough to get rid of not knowing. Those cultivations were of a much higher degree than what is needed to undergo the stream for which less behaviour, less concentration and less wisdom are good enough. In any case, when good enough, well... that is just perfect.

Rebirth & Reincarnation

We don't need to consult many buddhist texts to read that according to them death is not the end of it all. Were it so a knife would then already have been a far more easier tool. Rebirth and reincarnation don't have this problem but share the idea that a certain something is carried over, or remains, from one life to another and that is there the problem. Eternalism (sassatavādā) and nihilism (ucchedavādā) are the two worldly views on existence. Eternalism opposes nihilism and must first hold time as never ending (the here forever part). The breaking up, disintegration, perishing, of the existence-through-time is what nihilism is (the here not forever part). And both rebirth and reincarnation are based on these misconceptions.

For something you never ever have experienced, seen, heard of, etc. you have no name. If it has a name it is for a certain experience. But if this is misunderstood that name includes the misunderstanding. Things can be remembered "Consumed (SN 22.79)", thought out, perceived, yet misunderstood. And rebirth and reincarnation do not only talk about life and dead, they also include a certain what and how. And depending on this these views can be seen as different or as synonyms. But what these outsiders' views can not include is dependent-co-arising. If rebirth and reincarnation were to be redefined to imply dependent-co-arising it wouldn't disentangle anything as they build further on top what was not understood. It added another concept to the confusion, now requiring more explanation not less. Just as with eating; it doesn't matter how often you eat it stays eating (eating is eating) you wouldn't then suddenly re-eat, which would now require more explanation not less 'was it about vomit? or what cows do?' So this redefinition engraves and masquerades the already underlying wrong view.

Dependent-co-arising explained as existence through time, x-lifetimes, stays to be sassatavādā & ucchedavādā. Instead of rebranding rebirth and reincarnation it is now dependent-co-arising that has become subjected to this car cloning, as the world can only go by both ends. So what happens is that this "dependent-co-arising" now affirms rebirth and reincarnation as it is molded into them. It becomes the new how for these views and justifies them. The middle has been thrown out, the jargon is kept. With rebirth and reincarnation beings are viewed as reborn or reincarnated, yet both views must thus at least acknowledge birth. And it is precisely birth which is not being understood. Where rebirth and reincarnation are used, the Pāḷi texts talk about birth, next birth, a following becoming, etc. Birth is not just a view and it already includes the possibility for a next birth (birth is birth) for it is dependently-co-arisen. The terms rebirth and reincarnation don't add value but will lead people astray as they affirm the wrong views on existence. There is no reason to seek shelter in these wrong views, two wrongs don't make a right.

The world is having to go by the both ends (eternalism, nihilism). It was the Tathāgata who taught by the middle, and the middle simply can not be grouped with either end.

Sabbe Dhammā Anattā

> Sabbe saṅkhārā aniccā
> Sabbe saṅkhārā dukkhā
> Sabbe dhammā anattā

A common explanation is that since the third line talks about dhammā, instead of saṅkhārā, it includes both saṅkhārā and asaṅkhārā. And nibbāna, being asaṅkhārā, is thus included. But is this a valid inference?

One who underwent the stream has understood anattā, then the last line is clear. Till then anattā is misunderstood (idem the others). To come to understand anattā we need to train. And what is there to train? In this context we can look at "Consumed (SN 22.79)" where is said that masses (khandhā) are unstable (anicca). And what is unstable is suffering (dukkha). What is suffering is not self (anattā) and should be seen with wisdom just as it is: 'Not this is of me, not this is I exist, not this is to me self'. Which leads to getting fed up and with being fed up comes dispassion. From dispassion, emancipation and with emancipation the knowledge.

That the masses are unstable is here a given, a statement; it is here not explained. In order to understand we need to learn to see for ourselves how this is so, which requires a thorough grasping of their principle. When we understand the principle of f.i. matter, we can even say something about matter which we have never ever encountered before. And to look at this principle we need to look for, a more general level. What do all manifestations of matter have in common? That what it is, is then its characteristic and all matter behave accordingly. Thus when wood is understood then to that extend all wooden things are understood. Likewise, when saṅkhārā are understood (as unstable) then all dhammā are understood (as thus not self). And that is what those three lines say. This way they can be seen as a very compact instruction.

But would that rule out nibbāna?

By implying nibbāna as being included, it must also imply unstableness (anattā is seen because unstableness is seen) and with unstableness suffering, which simply can't be. The line 'sabbe dhammā anattā' does not justify making such (atta or anattā) claims about the asaṅkhāta at all.

Saddhā

Saddhā is often translated as faith.

The dictionary gives for saddhā but one word: faith.

Now faith is mutually exclusive with knowing and understanding. One who underwent the stream knows and understands, it is thus a bit odd to assign faith here. One wouldn't be even open to the teachings without some kind of faith or trust, but when it is understood then there is no doubt about it.

That there is then no doubt about it now that is with the strength of saddhā "The Eastern Gatehouse (SN 48.44)". And saddhā can come from wisdom "The Eastern Park I (SN 48.45)". Thus if faith has room for doubt then saddhā can't be it. So, when you have no doubt about it, what do you have? When one knows and understands one is confident. Confidence can come from wisdom but it can come from faith or belief as well. In one case there is no doubt and in the other case there is no room given to doubt. Thus so for the strength of confidence.

Pāḷi-English

> Saddhā (f.) confidence.

Samphappalāpa

Samphappalāpa is often translated as idle talk or idle chatter.

It is wrong speech and thus best avoided. Idle is seen as irrelevant, lazy, without purpose, pointless. Consequently people might try to avoid talk that is not to the point. But talk that is not to the point, small talk, can be a way to connect socially and avoiding it might make it socially a bit awkward. And so there are those who do engage in small talk while seeing this as a transgression. Either way there is then some friction. If this is the case I would like to point out that the texts indicate small talk was used by the Tathāgata. And saying things like 'bless you' or 'be healthy' to someone who is sneezing is accepted, even though it doesn't help against the sneezing. It is just customary and not doing so could create a not so useful distance. Samphappalāpa is always wrong speech, but whether it needs to be understood as idle that is a different thing.

> Sampha (adj. — n.) frivolous; nt. frivolity, foolishness.

Samphappalāpa is listed as frivolous talk, which indeed is not different from idle chatter. But we should also look at "Hell and Heaven 1st (AN 10.211)" where a list is shown of what samphappalāpa entails:

> Theorizing untimely, theorizing not about the essence, theorizing for unsettlement, theorizing without principles, theorizing without discipline. The speech from the talk is with non-situational hedging, not by time, without arguments. Unlimited hedging, put together for unsettlement.

These are with the intent of being undermining, unsettling (hedging is used to express ambiguity, evasiveness) which involves some dishonesty, and thus is the speech not idle. Hence does frivolous not fit and is it instead of foolishness's foolish speech, speech to fool. Yet such speech can be done while not being that aware of it, f.i. out of habit. So then rather than dishonest, or to fool, it is deceptive. And deceptive, says a dictionary, can mean unprincipled, without principles, which is one of the items in the list.

> Palāpa prattling, prattle, nonsense; adj. talking idly, chatting, idle, void.

These words are seen as negative and gave the impression it being just about the content (idle, void). And thus could deceptive chatting be interpreted as if chatting is being deceptive in nature or that chatting, being already no good, has this worse variant were it is here about. So let's look a bit further. Palāpa reminds of palaver (resorting to other Indo-European languages can sometimes help). And palaver is by some seen as a conversation, discussion, negotiation being idle or fruitless, while by others it is taken as a fuss or bother. This didn't solve a thing. But palaver comes from the Portuguese palavra ("word") and with that we can play a bit.

Samphappalāpa could then be 'deceptive wording'. And this fits. It shouldn't have been seen as about idle chatting or nonsense as it was never about the receiver. It is about the ripening of action (heading towards a good or bad destination) and thus about the action of the sender who, led by greed, hate and delusion, is undermining the communication by means of deceptive wording, for something they believed was worth it.

Pāḷi-English

> Samphappalāpa deceptive wording.

Saṅkappa

Saṅkappa is often translated as thought.

We got thoughts all over the path… it seems so vague.

What we can read is that there are three right ones nekkhammasaṅkappo, abyāpādasaṅkappo, avihiṃsāsaṅkappo and three wrong ones kāmasaṅkappo, byāpādasaṅkappo, vihiṃsāsaṅkappo.

Nekkhamma has to do with putting away lust (kāma) thus abstinence, abyāpāda is 'without anger' and avihiṃsā is 'without harm'. The three wrong ones are the ones 'with lust', 'with anger' and 'with harm'. They correspond with passion, friction and not knowing. The links with passion and friction might be clear, and for the last one it shouldn't be hard to see that if someone doesn't know what he or she is doing it will cause harm; thus harmful.

While we can have thoughts with abstinence (nekkhammavitakko), thoughts without anger (abyāpādavitakko) and thoughts without harm (avihiṃsāvitakko), it is a bit different from how to actually approach things, carry yourself, position yourself as with abstinence, without anger, without harm. And this is to me what saṅkappa is, attitude. Which does connect:

With right view, right attitude.

Pāḷi-English

> Saṅkappa attitude.

Saṅkhārā

Saṅkhārā is often seen translated as (volitional) formations, fabrications, etc.

It is certainly understandable how certain aspects of saṅkhārā got to be translated as saṅkhārā, but in doing so it also got a bit abstract and unclear.

Important is to remember that all what is taken up as 'me, this I am, this is myself' which do not fall into one of the other masses plus the taking up, fall into this one. And what do you think, do you sense you to be (volitional) formations or fabrications?

Saṅkhārā translates as inclinations. When we say one is wired in such way or one is of such or so character it relates to this mass, and when something goes against how you are wired, thus inclined, then you'll quickly notice how strongly this goes against your sense of being; you.

Pāḷi-English

> Saṅkhārā (pl.) inclinations.

Sati

Sati is often found translated as mindfulness or recollection.

It is the seventh member of the noble eight-membered way on the path heading to the cessation of suffering. And it is said of sati that it means memory. It would be handy if a translation could be done by meaning and by letter but memory doesn't quite fit so recollection or mindfulness are used. Now, mindfulness, awareness, would be sampajañña so we can quickly skip that as a valid interpretation. That leaves us with recollection.

But let's look into this a bit more. First textual, by looking at what is called sati "Division (SN 45.8)" and then practical, discoverable, by looking at the noble eight-membered way as here these members lead on from one to another. So with recollection for sati we would get:

As to what is called recollection:

> 'Here, almsmen, an almsman looking into body dwells in body as the ardent aware recollector would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world ... feelings ... mind ... principles ... This is called, almsmen, right recollection.'

And as member of the noble eight-membered way:

> 'With right view, right attitude; with right attitude, right speech; with right speech, right doing; with right doing, right way of life; with right way of life, right exertion; with right exertion, right recollection; with right recollection, right concentration'.

And thus would recollection take some justification to make it work; that what is called sati doesn't look like what we would expect to see for what recollection is at all and it doesn't flow quite smoothly from the previous member into the following one either. So it doesn't work. Then let's approach sati differently.

What we know is that right exertion enables right sati and right sati enables right concentration "Wrongness (AN10.103)". The four radiances (jhanā) are right concentration and from the second one on thoughts plus thinking (vitakkavicāra) are not present any more. And that means that in sati they are. Right exertion is exerting, creating interest, applying vigour, straining, confronting the mind for the (non)-arising of (un)arisen (un)wholesome principles "Division (SN45.8)". So when right exertion is exerted, what is there then left to do? We can't say 'to stop thoughts plus thinking' because that stilling belongs to the next member, so what is left?

Normally we dwell in the world, going after all sorts of interesting experiences. We can dwell in a book, we can dwell in the past, but when not falling for that, then what is there left to dwell in? Body, if what is looked into is body, or feelings if what looked into are feelings, or mind ... or principles ... thus to dwell in one's own domain, so to speak, that is what is left to do. Suppose someone is reading a book, quite absorbed, oblivious to the world outside. It can happened that when a person calls them they would not hear it. It doesn't mean they don't hear sounds; suppose there was music playing and that gets stopped, this might get noticed even though they where oblivious to exactly what was playing; it just all became background noise. So this person is absorbed while they are seen turning the pages, while the story is very much alive for them; we could call this being absorbed, or dwelling, or living, in the story. But how would you call it when someone sets aside all avarice plus discontentment about the world, draws back from the outside world, in order to turn inwards into "their own domain"?

I would call this meditating. Let's see if it would fit the two points:

As to what is called meditation:

> 'Here, almsmen, an almsman looking into body dwells in body as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world ... feelings ... mind ... principles ... This is called, almsmen, right meditation.'

So far it fits nicely;
And as member of the noble eight-membered way:

> 'with right exertion, right meditation; with right meditation, right concentration.'

Here too it flows smoothly right? That meditation sides with concentration is something even people who don't know anything about the noble eight-membered way might say; it is not strange to see that the training to advance in mind would involve meditation. Right meditation enables right concentration.

It doesn't seem to be the case that sati, in this context, must mean memory. It is not used that way, not in the translations nor in the Pāḷi. I used to find meditation vague 'what is it you do?' but explained as dwelling in body, feelings, mind, principles, so to turn inwards into "one's own domain" and by telling what is preliminary done through right exertion 'by removing avarice plus discontentment about the world' it became quite practical. Attendance (upaṭṭhāna) is the action or state of going regularly to, or being present, which here is in body, in feelings, in mind, in principles. And these four attendances of meditation (cattāro satipaṭṭhānā) are indications of concentration "A Concise Catechism (MN 44)".

So is sati not memory then?

Well, it depends. Usually when we talk about memory we think of it as this thing, just like we do with consciousness. And therefor the descriptions didn't seem to fit. But memory and consciousness as things are just figures of speech. Memory is about the ability to remember. If someone remembers the past, they can relive the past, they can dwell in the past. So memory is this ability to withdraw from the current surrounding to dwell in the past. And withdrawing from the current surrounding to dwell in "one's own domain" is what we call meditation. It is this mechanism what sati then is (which is what memory then is). Grammatically do memory and remembering for sati not work, and as they are commonly looked at from another angle they are understood as being different things. And as sati is usually translated differently, we then end up with three different things (memory, remembering or recollection, meditation). But we can say that the mechanism of how this ability to remember operates (memory) is when dwelling into "one's own domain" called meditation. Or we can say that memory is this stepping back, and within a certain context is this stepping back called meditation. And so is meditation memory. But to avoid being misunderstood it is better to just use meditation, after all etymology is not exactly what we are after.

Pāḷi-English

> Sati (f.) meditation.
> Satipaṭṭhāna attendance of meditation.

Sīla

Sīla is often translated as virtue.

> A virtue is a trait, quality, that is deemed morally good.

Now would you consider right concentration to be a virtue? Or right exertion? And what about right view? I do, yet those are not sīla.

And what to think of bad virtue? A bad quality which is deemed morally good? This is rather strange right? Yet sīla can be good or bad.

Good or bad speech, good or bad doing, good or bad way of life, those are sīla. When someone is seen with them we say they are behaving well or badly; it is seen as good or bad behaviour, so let's just call it that, behaviour.

Pāḷi-English

> Sīla (nt.) behaviour.

Sitting Cross-Legged

Sitting cross-legged has never been that clear to me. Is it about the full lotus position? Or that position where you sit with your knees up high? And doesn't this automatically devalue the half lotus position, or the position where you lay your legs bent in front of you, or sitting on a chair, by basically putting down this part of the instruction? My advise was not to worry about it and just sit stable. But now, while working on a translation, I had to deal with it. So far all the translations I have seen say the same thing. But let's see if an "alternative" without the instruction to sit cross-legged can be made.

> 'Idha, bhikkhave, bhikkhu araññagato vā rukkhamūlagato vā suññāgāragato vā nisīdati pallaṅkaṃ ābhujitvā...'

This usually gets translated into something like:

> 'Here, almsmen, an almsman gone to a forest, or gone to the foot of a tree, or gone to an empty home, sits down having bent the legs crosswise...'.

To avoid sitting crosswise I need to look at the phrase 'pallaṅkaṃ ābhujitvā'. Pallaṅkaṃ is said to mean sitting cross-legged. It also means divan, sofa, couch, seat and it is being used in this way. To keep things consequent and uncomplicated let's try to use that here as well. And ābhujitvā is the aor.ger. of ābhujati and ābhujati = 3pers. of 'ā' + 'bhuja'. Bhuja can mean bend, with ābhujitvā then as 'having bent' or 'having folded'.

A quick peek, also outside the four Nikāyā, learns that pallaṅka:

1. Is used as something to sit on. So far I have not yet seen a conclusion it must be a manner in which to sit. Just like that in this context there is not spoken of a manner to keep your hands or eyes. — There is spoken of straightening the body, but as in 'aspiring', which could be followed even if your body isn't straight.

2. Is used by those travelling in air. It is a strong image, flying through the air sitting crosswise but here I am reminded of the story of the flying carpet; it isn't that a rug or carpet could then not make sense (and here is, in Pāḷi, the instrumental form being used).
3. Shelters the knees from the rain. Sitting crosswise would then have to protect the knees from getting wet. Having the knees protected from rain and cold by means of folding something of a cloth to tuck them in would seem to make sense. The covering function reminds me also of AN3.64 Venāgapurasuttaṃ where the exalted one collected some grasses and leaves and then "sat down on it folding his legs crosswise", which perhaps could be read as having folded a cover, over that pile, to make a cushion to sit on. And perhaps this could also shelter the knees, and onward, in case the ground is moist.

More and more pallaṅka seems as if it could be related to some kind of mat, rug, cover. It is found in a combination with animal skin (e.g. hair vāla removed from a pallaṅka). Yet a spread, rug, mat is santhata, a sitting cloth. Then again, a sitting cloth functions as a cover. There is an example of a body covered with veins, and also a pallaṅka covered with a woollen rug, thus the sitting cloth as cover might fit. Suppose you don't have a sitting cloth but a friend lends you one so you both can have your own seats. Then when asked if that is your seat, you could answer this by saying that it is your seat but not your sitting cloth. And if you would clean it and hang it to dry, it is the sitting cloth (santhata) that hangs and not the seat (pallaṅka). It is in this way that we can look at their relation.

Thus a cloth can be folded to also protect the knees, it can be spread over a pile of leaves to fold a cushion, it can be folded to get some difference in height for hips and knees. All in all 'folding a seat' could make sense and with it we would get:

> 'Here, almsmen, an almsman gone to a forest, or gone to the foot of a tree, or gone to an empty home, having folded a seat he sits down...'

In this way the instruction doesn't need to say you must sit crosswise. Which doesn't mean you can't sit like that, but if you do perhaps do so for the right reasons. Perhaps you don't need to damage your legs thinking you must sit in a certain way, perhaps you don't need to train to sit this way to impress or take it as a measurement of improvement and perhaps you don't need to feel unable to follow 'the sitting instruction'; what if you even don't have two legs to begin with.

Taking Refuge

Everyone thinks they are right, there is no one thinking they are wrong. When it turned out later you were wrong, you are then now right about being then wrong. And even if you think 'This action is bad, I shouldn't be doing this' it is mere a double right: you already know it is a bad action so you are right about that, and for some reason it is still the right thing for you to do so now.

Basically you can't do things which on all levels are seen by you as wrong, which is already covered by the words right and wrong which do have some relation to you. We can't directly see our wrong view but we can try to understand it indirectly f.i. with the thought: 'I am not awakened therefore I must have wrong view' however, this comes from taking up that view as right first; so you are then still, first right. Things are thus met with certain blindfolds on; they are in a blind corner and are not seen.

Taking refuge is basically resorting to another one's proclamation to see what is more true; it is like using mirrors to be able to see what is in your blind spot. When some asks in how far a principle is in agreement with science, it usually shows their refuge lies foremost in science. Or when concerned whether it is confirm their school, foremost their school. And refuge to the awakened one does have its own problems, for the question remains 'Which awakened one?' Some say the texts, within and across schools, are in contradiction, some argue it is all the same, in any case when taking refuge you still already decided what you hold as true first. A safer approach then is to investigate what you hold as true and then go by what you 'understand to be true for yourself'. Without accepting and denying things you don't understand, else you would just imply you do understand which just shows where your refuge lies foremost. It can be handy not to take to big chunks all at once but to work with smaller steps; the more you work with what you really know the deeper and wider your understanding grows. Till someday you can be your own refuge without the blindfolds on.

The Threefold Training

When upholding right speech we do so because it goes for us in a right direction. So that is a wise thing to do. To that extend this is a right view which, structurally thus, comes first. And this is what the ariyo aṭṭhaṅgiko maggo (commonly translated as the noble eightfold path) tells us. And doing so we'll also want to watch our mind, which does take some exertion and concentration, else our thoughts would be all over the place. Our speech could then turn out to be not right. So working on one member is then not without involving the others. Hence there is no need to worry about getting right view first, or fear about missing out by seeing sīla as a surrogate start. That unclarity itself is an obstruction. We do however, need to be well informed and we do need to be paying attention; this supports right view.

Magga is often translated as path. I use path for paṭipadā and way for magga (and eight-membered for aṭṭha-aṅgika) so I have a noble eight-membered way. If a path has steps, what would you say a (high) way got? Right, lanes. To illustrate this highway with eight lanes we set up a wooden train set for kids. As it is not so intuitively to set up we have to get ourselves well informed. If we build this highway we must know where we are heading to right? So let's say we want to go to ... well, to the outside, so our highway is then build in accordance to this path. It is set up by glueing eight tracks together, as lanes (which thus form the way), prolonged with the remaining tracks glued to their ends. Each track is magnetic and got its own little wooden magnetic train car with a small eye bolt on top. Here we run a wire through so they are all attached. We add the accompanied name tags to the appropriate lanes and when the cars have been placed on their tracks all is set and ready to go.

On this path our highway advances through three "landmasses" (rooms). The landmass of sīla, the mass of samādhi and the mass of paññā. Thus when moving train car number 3, at 'right speech', all cars advance through the mass of sīla. Sīla is behaviour and samādhi concentration. When we leave the mass of Behaviour and arrive in the mass of Concentration it doesn't mean concentration is without behaviour. Concentration is build on top of behaviour; they are (on) different stages. Had we not been informed we would have found an outside at a horizontal level which in the long run, as the earth is round, would cause us to be circling around. Now our highway first goes through the ceilings, before going through the roof.

Hence we can find in "A Concise Catechism (MN 44)":

> 'Yet lady, is the noble eight-membered way inclined or uninclined?'
> OK the noble, Mr Visākha, eight-membered way is inclined.

> OK now lady are, by the noble eight-membered way, three masses included, or is by three masses the noble eight-membered way included?
> OK not, Mr Visākha, are by the noble eight-membered way three masses included; and OK by three, Mr Visākha, masses is the noble eight-membered way included.

What is said here is that these three masses are not included by the noble eight-membered way, thus not a lower or equal level, but they include the noble eight-membered way, thus a higher level. The mass of sīla then got a higher level of right speech, a higher level of right action, a higher level of a right way of life, plus the other members of the way which have not gone higher yet. As if several train cars, e.g. 3, 4 and 5, are being pushed, leaving some distance between them and the others.

So what these little train cars represent is this advancement, cultivation, on the path. Cultivation on the path will gradually give a more refined, advanced, noble eight-membered way; cultivation pours over by cultivation. For example not-lying does takes some exertion and concentration. If we don't talk we don't tell a lie, let alone when thoughts plus thinking have stopped, the second radiance, jhāna, which takes a higher level of exertion and concentration. Or with not-stealing; if we don't take any things which are not ours there is no stealing, and things which are not ours include the five masses and without even holding them the final yokes are cut; which takes this higher level of wisdom. And this is possible because it is the noble eight-membered way that is inclined.

This noble eight-membered way is inclined as its members are inclined, which allows for a gradual training on gradual levels. Thus when on the way a further training is undertaken to advance in behaviour (adhisīla), advance in mind (adhicitta) and advance in wisdom (adhipaññā). With the threefold training, the refinements on refinements, the difference in sīla, samādhi, paññā, the difference in persons, the sottāpanna and the sakadāgāmin, the anāgāmin, and the arahant.

Three Types of Dukkha

In the texts (e.g. SN 38.14, SN 45.165, DN 33) three types of suffering are named, not explained. They are explained outside the texts but so far I have seen them those led to weird implications. So let's look into this.

1. Dukkhadukkhatā

Dukkha due to suffering (dukkha). And what is suffering? Birth, ageing plus death. This doesn't mean one must feel sorrow or have an unhappy life. One can be very happy and joyful in this life. The point is that when there is no security from them, sooner or later, grievous things will happen for sure.

Thus for the virtuous one there is no dukkhadukkhatā since birth, ageing and dying has stopped; the deathless has been reached.

2. Saṅkhāradukkhatā

Dukkha due to inclination (saṅkhāra). Sometimes people keep making bad decisions and suffer the consequences. It might seem as if they just can't help themselves, as if they are wired that way (inclined). They are more inclined to act out of greed, hatred and delusion.

Thus for the virtuous one there is no saṅkhāradukkhatā since unwholesome choices can't be made as passion, friction and not knowing are gotten rid of; there is thus no such inclination.

3. Vipariṇāmadukkhatā

Dukkha due to change (vipariṇāma). As suffering is due to it, it is a change for the worse. We might get robbed, our environment may have to deal with severe weather conditions, we might get sick, our countries might get into war, etc. So suffering due to all these sort of changes, as when run out of luck (so to speak) or in case of force majeure.

Thus for the virtuous one there is no vipariṇāmadukkhatā since there is no appropriation, no regarding things as me, mine, for me, to me; there is no suffering depending on this.

In this way the names are pretty much self-explanatory.

Vipassanā

Vipassanā is often translated as insight.

From the texts we learn that it partakes in wisdom, for which it needs to be cultivated. And there lies the problem; you can't cultivate insight. At best you can cultivate other things and wait for insight to pop up so to speak but insight itself is more a case of it is there or it isn't.

In general, what would be needed for wisdom? This would be understanding right? If we don't understand then in that area is wisdom not yet to be expected. The dictionary says that vipassanā is from vi, which can be used to emphasise or intensify, and passati, to see. To really or clearly see is about the meaning, to know why or how something works, which is what understanding is.

And in general, how is understanding cultivated? We get ourselves well informed and we may have to get more familiar with it right? So like that, we pay attention to what is pointed out (which is by the way the support for right view, which is included with the mass of wisdom) and we may have to get more familiar with it. Understanding is to be cultivated so that wisdom is cultivated so that not knowing is gotten rid of.

Pāḷi-English

> Vipassanā (f.) understanding.

II. Threads

A Certain Clergyman (SN 12.46)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Nidānavaggo
Nidānasaṃyuttaṃ
Gahawayivaggo
Aññatarabrāhmaṇasuttaṃ

Situated at Sāvatthi.

OK, then a certain clergyman approached there where the exalted one was. Having approached the exalted one they greeted together. Having exchanged the cordial howdy greet he sat down at one end. OK, at one end seated he, the clergyman, said this to the exalted one:

'OK what now, dear Gotama, is he who does, he who gets to experience?'

"Is he who does, he who gets to experience', OK, clergyman, this is the one end.'

'Yet what, dear Gotama, another does, another gets to experience?'

"Another does, another gets to experience', OK, clergyman, this is the second end.

These for you, clergyman, are the both ends having to go by; the Tathāgata points out the principle by the middle:

With support of not knowing, inclinations. With support of inclinations, cognition. With support of cognition, name plus form. With support of name plus form, hexad-base. With support of hexad-base, touch. With support of touch, feeling. With support of feeling, longing. With support of longing, taking up. With support of taking up, becoming. With support of becoming, birth. With support of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest appear. So for this entire mass of suffering the rise is.

However, without a remainder from dispassion plus cessation of not knowing, cessation of inclinations. With cessation of inclinations, cessation of cognition. With cessation of cognition, cessation of name plus form. With cessation of name plus form, cessation of hexad-base. With cessation of hexad-base, cessation of touch. With cessation of touch, cessation of feeling. With cessation of feeling, cessation of longing. With cessation of longing, cessation of taking up. With cessation of taking up, cessation of becoming. With cessation of becoming, cessation of birth. With cessation of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest cease. So for this entire mass of suffering the cessation is.'

So said he, the clergyman, said this to the exalted one:

'Excellent dear Gotama, excellent dear Gotama ... I the follower, have you Gotama for endorser, from this day on while endowed with breath, as the refuge gone to.'

A Concise Catechism (MN 44)

Majjhima Nikāya
Mūlapaṇṇāsapāḷi
Cūḷavedallasuttaṃ

So I learned:

On one occasion the exalted one dwells at Bamboo's Grove, at the squirrels' feeding area, at Rājagaha. OK, then follower Visākha approached there where almswoman Dhammadinnā was. Having approached almswoman Dhammadinnā, having saluted, he sat down at one end. OK, at one end seated follower Visākha said this to almswoman Dhammadinnā:

'Embodiment, embodiment, lady, it is called. OK now which, lady, is by the exalted one the said embodiment?'

'OK, these five, Mr Visākha, the masses plus the taking up are by the exalted one the said embodiment, viz: the mass of form plus the taking up, the mass of feeling plus the taking up, the mass of perception plus the taking up, the mass of inclinations plus the taking up, the mass of cognition plus the taking up. OK, these, Mr Visākha, the five masses plus the taking up, are by the exalted one the said embodiment.'

'Good, lady.'

OK, follower Visākha welcoming, appreciating, the talk of almswoman Dhammadinnā, asked beyond the question.

'Rise of embodiment, rise of embodiment, lady, it is said. OK now which, lady, is by the exalted one the said rise of embodiment?'

'This what is, Mr Visākha, the longing, the welcoming of this plus that gone together with joy plus passion, is of a following becoming, viz: longing for lust, longing for becoming, longing for non-becoming. OK, this, Mr Visākha, is by the exalted one the said rise of embodiment.'

'Cessation of embodiment, cessation of embodiment, lady, it is called. OK now which, lady, is by the exalted one the said cessation of embodiment?'

'OK, what is, Mr Visākha, just of that longing the without a remainder from dispassion plus cessation, the abandoning, relinquishment, release, unnesting. OK, this, Mr Visākha, is by the exalted one the said cessation of embodiment.'

'The path heading for the cessation of embodiment, the path heading for the cessation of embodiment, lady, it is called. OK now which, lady, is by the exalted one the said path heading for the cessation of embodiment?'

'OK, just this, Mr Visākha, noble eight-membered way is by the exalted one the said path heading for the cessation of embodiment, viz: right view, right attitude, right speech, right doing, right way of life, right exertion, right meditation, right concentration.'

'OK now just that, lady, taking up; is it those five masses plus the taking up, or is the taking up otherwise from the five masses plus the taking up?'

'OK, it is not, Mr Visākha, just that the taking up is those five masses plus the taking up, the taking up is also not otherwise from the five masses plus the taking up. OK what, Mr Visākha, amongst the five, amongst the masses plus the taking up, the interest plus passion is, that there the taking up.'

'Yet lady, view on embodiment is how?'

'Here, Mr Visākha, not having learned the commoner, is not one who views nobleness, is not keen of the principle of nobleness, is uneducated in the principle of nobleness. Is not one who views authentic men, is not keen of the principle of authentic men, is uneducated in the principle of authentic men. He regards form as self, or self having form, or in self form, or in form self. He regards feeling as self, or self having feeling, or in self feeling, or in feeling self. He regards perception as self, or self having perception, or in self perception, or in perception self. He regards inclinations as self, or self having inclinations, or in self inclinations, or in inclinations self. He regards cognition as self, or self having cognition, or in self cognition, or in cognition self. OK so, Mr Visākha, view on embodiment is.'

'Yet lady, view on embodiment is how not?'

'Here, Mr Visākha, having learned the hearer of what is noble, is one who views nobleness, is keen of the principle of nobleness, is educated in the principle of nobleness. Is one who views authentic men, is keen of the principle of authentic men, is educated in the principle of authentic men. He not regards form as self, nor self having form, nor in self form, nor in form self. He not regards feeling as self, or self having feeling, or in self feeling, or in feeling self. He not regards perception as self, or self having perception, or in self perception, or in perception self. He not regards inclinations as self, or self having inclinations, or in self inclinations, or in inclinations self. He not regards cognition as self, or self having cognition, or in self cognition, or in cognition self. OK so, Mr Visākha, view on embodiment is not.'

'Yet lady, which noble eight-membered way?'

'OK, just this, Mr Visākha, noble eight-membered way, viz: right view, right attitude, right speech, right doing, right way of life, right exertion, right meditation, right concentration.'

'Yet lady, is the noble eight-membered way inclined or uninclined?'

'OK, the noble, Mr Visākha, eight-membered way is inclined.'

'OK now lady are, by the noble eight-membered way, three masses included, or is by three masses the noble eight-membered way included?'

'OK not, Mr Visākha, are by the noble eight-membered way three masses included; and OK, by three, Mr Visākha, masses is the noble eight-membered way included: and, Mr Visākha, what is right speech, and what is right doing, and what right way of life, these principles are included with the mass of behaviour. And what is right exertion, and what is right meditation, and what is right concentration, these principles are included with the mass of concentration. And what is right view, and what is right attitude, these principles are included with the mass of wisdom.'

'Yet lady, which concentration? which principles are indications of concentration? which principles are requirements for concentration? which is the cultivation of concentration?'

'OK what, Mr Visākha, is focus of mind this is concentration; the four attendances of meditation are indications of concentration; the four right strivings are requirements for concentration; what just of these principles is the indulgence, the cultivation, the making a lot of, this here is the cultivation of concentration.'

'Yet lady, inclinations; how many?'

'These three, Mr Visākha, inclinations: inclination for body, inclination for speech, inclination for mind.'

'Yet lady, which inclination for body? which inclination for speech? which inclination for mind?'

'OK, Mr Visākha, breathing in plus breathing out: inclination for body, thoughts plus thinking: inclination for speech, and perception and feeling: inclination for mind.'

'Yet lady, why is breathing in plus breathing out inclination for body? why are thoughts plus thinking inclination for speech? why are and perception and feeling the inclination for mind?'

'OK, breathing in plus breathing out, Mr Visākha, are bodily; these principles are bound to body. From that, breathing in plus breathing out are inclination for body. OK prior, Mr Visākha, having reasoned, having wandered, afterwards one breaks into speech. From that, thoughts plus thinking are inclination for speech. And perception and feeling are mental; these principles are bound to mind. From that, and perception and feeling are inclination for mind.'

'Yet lady, engagement with cessation of perception of the felt is how?'

'OK, Mr Visākha, of this engaged cessation of perception of the felt, for an almsman it is not so: or 'I shall engage with cessation of perception of the felt', nor 'I am engaged with cessation of perception of the felt', nor 'I have engaged with cessation of perception of the felt'; OK, for this then, just prior is a mind like that cultivated, therefor what brought it up from this like that.'

'Yet lady, of the engaged cessation of perception of the felt, for an almsman which principles are the first to cease? Or is it that inclination for body? or is it that inclination for speech? or is it that inclination for mind?'

'OK, Mr Visākha, of the engaged cessation of perception of the felt, for an almsman first ceases inclination for speech, from that inclination for body, from that inclination for mind.'

'Yet lady, from engagement with cessation of perception of the felt, the return is how?'

'OK, Mr Visākha, from engagement with cessation of perception of the felt, for an almsman the return is not such: or 'I shall be returning from engagement with cessation of perception of the felt', or 'I am returning from engagement with cessation of perception of the felt', or 'I have returned from engagement with cessation of perception of the felt'; OK, for this then, just prior is a mind like that cultivated, therefor what brought it up from this like that.

'Yet lady, of the return from the engagement with cessation of perception of the felt, for an almsman which principles are first to arise? Or be it that inclination for body? or be it that inclination for speech? or be it that inclination for mind?'

'OK, Mr Visākha, of the return from engagement with cessation of perception of the felt, for an almsman inclination for mind is first to arise, from that inclination for body, from that inclination for speech.'

'Yet lady, from the touch of the return from engagement with cessation of perception of the felt, how many do touch the almsman?'

'OK, Mr Visākha, from the touch of the return from engagement with cessation of perception of the felt, three do touch the almsman: the touch from emptiness, the touch from the absence of indication, the touch from the absence of aspiration.'

'Yet lady, of the return from engagement with cessation of perception of the felt, for an almsman sloping from what is the mind? gradating from what? slanting from what?

'OK, Mr Visākha, of the return from engagement with cessation of perception of the felt for an almsman, sloping from withdrawal is the mind, gradating from withdrawal, slanting from withdrawal.'

'Yet lady, feelings; how many?'

'OK, these three, Mr Visākha, feelings: Feelings of happiness, feelings of suffering, feelings of neither happiness nor suffering.'

'Yet lady, which feelings of suffering? which feelings of happiness? which feelings of neither happiness nor suffering?'

'OK, what is, Mr Visākha, or bodily or mentally happily agreeable felt; this the feeling of happiness. OK, what is, Mr Visākha, or bodily or mentally sufferingly, disagreeable felt; this the feeling of suffering. OK, what is, Mr Visākha, or bodily or mentally neither agreeable nor disagreeable felt; this the feeling of neither happiness nor suffering.'

'Yet lady, feelings from happiness: from what the happiness, from what the suffering? feelings from suffering: from what the happiness, from what the suffering? feelings from neither happiness nor suffering: from what the happiness, from what the suffering?'

OK, Mr Visākha, feelings from happiness: happiness from the state, suffering from the change; feelings from suffering: suffering from the state, happiness from the change; feelings from neither happiness nor suffering: happinesss from knowledge, suffering from ignorance.

'Yet lady, what is for a feeling to be happy the dormant dormancy? what is for a feeling to suffer the dormant dormancy? what is for a feeling neither happily nor sufferingly the dormant dormancy?

'OK, Mr Visākha, to a feeling to be happy the dormancy of passion is dormant, to a feeling to suffer the dormancy of friction is dormant, to a feeling neither happily nor sufferingly the dormancy of not knowing is dormant.'

'OK now lady, is to all the feeling to be happy the dormancy of passion dormant? is to all the feeling to suffer the dormancy of friction dormant? is to all the feeling neither happily nor sufferingly the dormancy of not knowing dormant?'

'OK, now Mr Visākha, not to all the feeling to be happy is the dormancy of passion dormant, not to all the feeling to suffer is the dormancy of friction dormant, not to all the feeling neither happily nor sufferingly is the dormancy of not knowing dormant.'

'Yet lady, what should be given up to a feeling to be happy? what should be given up to a feeling to suffer? what should be given up to a feeling neither happily nor sufferingly?'

'OK, Mr Visākha, to a feeling to be happy the dormancy of passion should be given up, to a feeling to suffer the dormancy of friction should be given up, to a feeling neither happily nor sufferingly the dormancy of not knowing should be given up.'

'OK now lady, to all feeling to be happy the dormancy of passion should be given up? to all feeling to suffer the dormancy of friction should be given up? to all feeling neither happily or sufferingly should the dormancy of not knowing be given up?

'OK, Mr Visākha, not to all feeling to be happy the dormancy of passion should be given up, not to all feeling to suffer the dormancy of friction should be given up, not to all feeling neither happily nor sufferingly should the dormancy of not knowing be given up. Here, Mr Visākha, an almsman is just withdrawing from lusts, withdrawing from unwholesome principles, with thoughts with thinking, withdrawal-bore the pleasantness plus happiness, he dwells having obtained the first radiance. By that he gives up the passion; the dormancy of passion is not dormant there. Here, Mr Visākha, an almsman reflects thus: 'O when may I hail for this; I shall dwell having obtained then as base what nobles dwell at having obtained presently as base?' Thus envy at the liberations without a beyond attending from what, with the support of envy, discontentment arises by that he gives up friction; the dormancy of friction is not dormant there. Here, Mr Visākha, an almsman and from the rejection of happiness and from the rejection of suffering, from the heading to rest of the just prior contentment plus discontentment, neither happily nor sufferingly, the objectiveness by the purity of meditation, he dwells having obtained the fourth radiance. By that he gives up not knowing; the dormancy of not knowing is not dormant there.

'Yet lady, by a feeling to be happy what is the contrary share?'

'OK, Mr Visākha, by a feeling to be happy the feeling of suffering is the contrary share.'

'Yet lady, by a feeling to suffer, what is the contrary share?'

'OK, Mr Visākha, by a feeling to suffer the feeling to be happy is the contrary share.'

'Yet lady, a feeling to neither suffer nor to be happy, what is the contrary share?'

'OK, Mr Visākha, a feeling to neither suffer nor to be happy not knowing is the contrary share.'

'Yet lady, of not knowing, what is the contrary share?'

'OK, Mr Visākha, of not knowing, knowing is the contrary share.'

'Yet lady, of knowing, what is the contrary share?'

'OK, Mr Visākha, of knowing, emancipation is the contrary share.'

'Yet lady, of emancipation, what is the contrary share?'

'OK, Mr Visākha, of emancipation is peace the contrary share.'

'Yet lady, of peace, what is the contrary share?'

'You went over, Mr Visākha, the question, you were not able to grasp the limit of the question. For immersing in peace, Mr Visākha, is the clergy conduct. Peace is the relief, peace fulfils the stopping. And when desiring, Mr Visākha, having approached the exalted one you could ask this here, and as the exalted one answers you, like that you might endorse it.'

OK then follower Visākha welcoming, appreciating, the talk from the almswoman Dhammadinnā, having saluted the almswoman Dhammadinnā, rose, having kept the right, approached there where the exalted one was. Having approached the exalted one, having saluted, he sat down at one end. OK, at one end seated he, follower Visākha, as far as the conversation with almswoman Dhammadinnā was with him all that he related to the exalted one. So said, the exalted one said this to follower Visākha:

'Wise, Visākha, is almswoman Dhammadinnā, of great wisdom, Visākha, is almswoman Dhammadinnā. Also if you Visākha would ask me this here, I also would answer that just so as that answer from the almswoman Dhammadinnā. And so, this and just from this here, may you endorse it.'

This said the exalted one.

Pleased follower Visākha welcomed the exalted one's talk.

A World Question (SN 35.82)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Saḷāyatanavaggo
Saḷāyatanasaṃyuttaṃ
Gilānavaggo
Lokapañhāsuttaṃ

OK, then a certain almsman approached there where the exalted one was. Having approached the exalted one they greeted together. Having exchanged the cordial howdy greet he sat down at one end. OK, at one end seated he, the almsman, said this to the exalted one:

'The world, the world, venerable, it is called. OK now in what respect, venerable, is it called 'world'?'

'OK, it is liable to "we're old", almsman, from that it is called 'world'.

And what is liable to "we're old"?

OK, sight, almsman, is liable to "we're old", forms are liable to "we're old", cognition by sight is liable to "we're old". The touch with sight is liable to "we're old". Also this what with the support of the touch with sight arises, the felt or happiness or suffering or neither happiness nor suffering, that also is liable to "we're old".

Hearing, almsman, is liable to "we're old". Sounds are liable to "we're old". Cognition by hearing is liable to "we're old". The touch with hearing is liable to "we're old". Also this what with the support of the touch with hearing arises, the felt or happiness or suffering or neither happiness nor suffering, that also is liable to "we're old".

Smell, almsman, is liable to "we're old". Scents are liable to "we're old". Cognition by smell is liable to "we're old". The touch with smell is liable to "we're old". Also this what with the support of the touch with smell arises, the felt or happiness or suffering or neither happiness nor suffering, that also is liable to "we're old".

Taste, almsman, is liable to "we're old". Flavours are liable to "we're old". Cognition by taste is liable to "we're old". The touch with taste is liable to "we're old". Also this what with the support of the touch with taste arises, the felt or happiness or suffering or neither happiness nor suffering, that also is liable to "we're old".

Body, almsman, is liable to "we're old". To be touched is liable to "we're old". Cognition by body is liable to "we're old". The touch with body is liable to "we're old". Also this what with the support of the touch with body arises, the felt or happiness or suffering or neither happiness nor suffering, that also is liable to "we're old".

Intellect, almsman, is liable to "we're old". Principles are liable to "we're old". Cognition by intellect is liable to "we're old". The touch with intellect is liable to "we're old". Also this what with the support of the touch with intellect arises, the felt or happiness or suffering or neither happiness nor suffering, that also is liable to "we're old".

OK, liable to "we're old", almsman, from that it is called 'world'.'

An Almsman (SN 46.5)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Mahāvaggo
Bojjhaṅgasaṃyuttaṃ
Pabbatavaggo
Bhikkhusuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

OK then a certain almsman approached there where the exalted one was. Having approached the exalted one they greeted together. Having exchanged the cordial howdy greet he sat down at one end. OK, at one end seated he, the almsman, said this to the exalted one:

'Members of enlightenment, members of enlightenment', venerable, they are called. OK now in what respect, venerable, are they called 'members of enlightenment'?'

'OK thus they lead to enlightenment, almsman, from that they are called 'members of enlightenment'. Here an almsman cultivates meditation as a member of enlightenment relying on withdrawal, relying on dispassion, relying on cessation, resulting in waivering; cultivates discernment of principles ... vigour ... pleasantness ... relaxation ... concentration ... objectiveness as a member of enlightenment relying on withdrawal, relying on dispassion, relying on cessation, resulting in waivering. For that these seven members of enlightenment are being from where the mind is emancipated from also the drain of lust; the mind is emancipated from also the drain of becoming; the mind is emancipated from also the drain of not knowing. Upon emancipation, thus emancipated, the knowledge is. He fathoms 'Birth is barren, the clergy conduct spent, done is what ought to be done, no further gain of presence'.

Thus they lead to enlightenment, almsman, from that they are called 'members of enlightenment'.'

Ānanda 1st (SN 54.13)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Mahāvaggo
Paṭhamāanandasuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

OK, then senior Ānanda approached there where the exalted one was. Having approached the exalted one, having saluted, he sat down at one end. OK, at one end seated senior Ānanda said this to the exalted one:

'OK now does it exist, venerable, one principle, when cultivated, when made a lot of, pours over into four principles, four principles, when cultivated, when made much of, pour over into seven principles, seven principles, when cultivated, when made much of, pour over into two principles?'

'OK, it does exist, Ānanda, one principle, when cultivated, when made a lot of, pours over into four principles, four principles, when cultivated, when made a lot of, pour over into seven principles, seven principles, when cultivated, when made a lot of, pour over into two principles.'

'Yet which, venerable, one principle, when cultivated, when made a lot of, pours over into four principles, four principles, when cultivated, when made a lot of, pour over into seven principles, seven principles when cultivated, when made a lot of pour over into two principles?'

'OK, concentration from meditation on the in breathe plus out breathe, Ānanda, is one principle, when cultivated, when made a lof of, pours over into the four attendances of meditation, the four attendances of meditation, when cultivated, when made a lot of, pour over into the seven members of enlightenment, the seven members of enlightenment, when cultivated, when made a lot of, pour over into knowledge plus emancipation.

Cultivated how, Ānanda, made much of how, does concentration from meditation on the in breathe plus out breathe pour over into the four attendances of meditation?

Here Ānanda, an almsman, gone to a forest or gone to the root of a tree, or gone to an empty home, having folded a seat he sits down, aspiring to straighten the body, peripherally attending the meditation.

He either meditative breathes in, or meditative breathes out.

Or while breathing in long fathoms 'long, I'll breathe in', or while breathing out long fathoms 'long, I'll breathe out'. Or while breathing in short fathoms 'short, I'll breathe in', or while breathing out short fathoms 'short, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while experiencing all body, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing all body, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while relaxing inclinations for body, I'll breathe in', trains 'while relaxing inclinations for body, I'll breathe out'.

Trains 'while experiencing pleasantness, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing pleasantness, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while experiencing happiness, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing happiness, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while experiencing inclinations for mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing inclinations for mind, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while relaxing inclinations for mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while relaxing inclinations for mind, I'll breathe out'.

Trains 'while experiencing mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing mind, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while gratifying mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while gratifying mind, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while concentrating mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while concentrating mind, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while emancipating mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while emancipating mind, I'll breathe out'.

Trains 'while looking into unstableness, I'll breathe in', trains 'while looking into unstableness, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while looking into dispassion, I'll breathe in', trains 'while looking into dispassion, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while looking into cessation, I'll breathe in', trains 'while looking into cessation, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while looking into relinquishment, I'll breathe in', trains 'while looking into relinquishment, I'll breathe out'.

On what occasion, Ānanda, an almsman:

Or while breathing in long fathoms 'long, I'll breathe in', or while breathing out long fathoms 'long, I'll breathe out'; Or while breathing in short fathoms 'short, I'll breathe in', or while breathing out short fathoms 'short, I'll breathe out'; Trains 'while experiencing all body, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing all body, I'll breathe out'; Trains 'while relaxing inclinations for body, I'll breathe in', trains 'while relaxing inclinations for body, I'll breathe out'; he is looking into body, Ānanda, the almsman on that occasion dwells in body as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world.

Of what is that the reason?

I say this is a certain body, Ānanda, this what is the breathing in plus the breathing out. Thus from that, Ānanda, looking into body an almsman on that occasion dwells in body as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world.

On what occasion, Ānanda, an almsman:

Trains 'while experiencing pleasantness, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing pleasantness, I'll breathe out'; Trains 'while experiencing happiness, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing happiness, I'll breathe out'; Trains 'while experiencing inclinations for mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing inclinations for mind, I'll breathe out'; Trains 'while relaxing inclinations for mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while relaxing inclinations for mind, I'll breathe out'; he is looking into feelings, Ānanda, the almsman on that occasion dwells in feelings as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world.

Of what is that the reason?

I say this is a certain feeling, Ānanda, this what is the in breathe plus out breathe when well payed attention to. Thus from that, Ānanda, looking into feelings an almsman on that occasion dwells in feelings as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world.

On what occasion, Ānanda, an almsman:

Trains 'while experiencing mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing mind, I'll breathe out'; Trains 'while gratifying mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while gratifying mind, I'll breathe out'; Trains 'while concentrating mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while concentrating mind, I'll breathe out'; Trains 'while emancipating mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while emancipating mind, I'll breathe out'; he is looking into mind, Ānanda, the almsman on that occasion dwells in mind as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world.

Of what is that the reason?

I do not say of the cultivation of the concentration from meditation on the in breathe plus out breathe the meditation is forgotten, without awareness. Therefore, Ānanda, looking into mind an almsman on that occasion dwells in mind as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world.

On what occasion, Ānanda, an almsman:

Trains 'while looking into unstableness, I'll breathe in', trains 'while looking into unstableness, I'll breathe out'; Trains 'while looking into dispassion, I'll breathe in', trains 'while looking into dispassion, I'll breathe out'; Trains 'while looking into cessation, I'll breathe in', trains 'while looking into cessation, I'll breathe out'; Trains 'while looking into relinquishment, I'll breathe in', trains 'while looking into relinquishment, I'll breathe out'; he is looking into principles, Ānanda, the almsman on that occasion dwells in principles as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world. Therefor what is this rejection of avarice plus discontentment, for knowing, viewing, it well is therefor here objectivated. Therefore Ānanda, looking into principles an almsman on that occasion dwells in principles as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world.

OK, cultivated so, made a lot of so, Ānanda, concentration from meditation on the in breathe plus out breathe pours over into the four attendances of meditation.

And cultivated how, Ānanda, made a lot of how do the four attendances for meditation pour over into the seven members of enlightenment?

On what occasion, Ānanda, an almsman looking into body dwells in body on that occasion for the almsman the attended meditation is not forgotten.

On what occasion, Ānanda, for the almsman the attended meditation is not forgotten, on that occasion for the almsman meditation as member of enlightenment is started. On that occasion the almsman cultivates meditation as member of enlightenment. On that occasion for the almsman meditation as member of enlightenment goes on pouring over by cultivation.

Like that he, the meditative dweller, for knowing the principle therefor investigates, inspects, scrutinizes.

On what occasion, Ānanda, an almsman, like that meditative dweller for knowing the principle therefor investigates, inspects, scrutinizes, on that occasion for the almsman discernment of principles as member of enlightenment is started. On that occasion the almsman cultivates discernment of principles as member of enlightenment. On that occasion for the almsman discernment of principles as member of enlightenment goes on pouring over by cultivation.

Therefor for him for knowing the principle, by investigation, by inspection, by scrutinizing, without sluggishness, vigour is started.

On what occasion, Ānanda, therefor for the almsman for knowing the principle, by investigation, by inspection, by scrutinizing, without sluggishness, vigour is started, on that occasion for the almsman vigour as member of enlightenment is started. On that occasion for the almsman vigour as member of enlightenment is cultivated. On that occasion for the almsman vigour as member of enlightenment goes on pouring over by cultivation.

Of the started vigour arises pleasantness not of the flesh.

On what occasion, Ānanda, for the almsman of the started vigour arises pleasantness not of the flesh, on that occasion for the almsman pleasantness as member of enlightenment is started. On that occasion the almsman cultivates pleasantness as member of enlightenment. On that occasion for the almsman pleasantness as member of enlightenment goes on pouring over by cultivation.

Pleasantness of intellect relaxes also the body, relaxes also the mind.

On what occasion, Ānanda, for the almsman pleasantness of intellect relaxes also the body, relaxes also the mind, on that occasion for the almsman relaxation as member of enlightenment is started. On that occasion the almsman cultivates relaxation as member of enlightenment. On that occasion for the almsman relaxation as member of enlightenment goes on pouring over by cultivation.

For with relaxation of body, the happy mind concentrates.

On what occasion, Ānanda, for the almsman with relaxation of body the happy mind concentrates, on that occasion for the almsman concentration as member of enlightenment is started. On that occasion the almsman cultivates concentration as member of enlightenment. On that occasion for the almsman concentration as member of enlightenment goes on pouring over by cultivation.

Well concentrated like that, that mind is here objectivated.

On what occasion, Ānanda, the almsman is well concentrated like that, mind is here objectivated, on that occasion for the almsman objectiveness as member of enlightenment is started. On that occasion the almsman cultivates objectiveness as member of enlightenment. On that occasion for the almsman objectiveness as member of enlightenment goes on pouring over by cultivation.

... looking into feelings ... looking into mind ... looking into principles ...

OK, cultivated so, Ānanda, made a lot of so, the four attendances of meditation pour over into the seven members of enlightenment.

Cultivated how, Ānanda, made a lot of how, do the seven members of enlightenment pour over into knowing plus emancipation?

Here, Ānanda, an almsman cultivates meditation as member of enlightenment, relying on withdrawal, relying on dispassion, relying on cessation, resulting in waivering; cultivates discernment of principles as a member of enlightenment ... vigour as a member of enlightenment .... pleasantness as a member of enlightenment ... relaxation as a member of enlightenment ... concentration as a member of enlightenment ... cultivates objectiveness as a member of enlightenment relying on withdrawal, relying on dispassion, relying on cessation, resulting in waivering.

OK, cultivated so, Ānanda, made a lot of so, the seven members of enlightenment pour over into knowledge plus emancipation.'

Arising of View (AN 2.126-127)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Dukanipātapāḷi
Tatiyapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Āsāduppajahavaggo

AN 2.126

'These two, almsmen, are the supports for the arising of wrong view. Which two? And the proclamation from others and improper attention. OK these, almsmen, the two, are the supports for the arising of wrong view.'

AN 2.127

'These two, almsmen, are the supports for the arising of right view. Which two? And the proclamation from others and proper attention. OK these, almsmen, the two, are the supports for the arising of right view.'

Attendances of Meditation (AN 4.274)

Aṅguttara Nikāya,
Catukkanipātapāḷi
Pañcamapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Rāgapeyyālaṃ
Satipaṭṭhānasuttaṃ

'For passion, almsmen, for getting acquainted with, four principles should be cultivated.

Which four?

Here, almsmen, an almsman looking into body dwells in body as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world.

Looking into feelings dwells in feelings as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world.

Looking into mind dwells in mind as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world.

Looking into principles dwells in principles as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world.

For passion, almsmen, for getting acquainted with, these four principles should be cultivated.'

Becoming 1st (AN 3.77)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Tikanipātapāḷi
Ānandavaggo
Paṭhamabhavasuttaṃ

OK, then senior Ānanda approached there where the exalted one was. Having approached the exalted one, having saluted, he sat down at one end. OK, at one end seated senior Ānanda said this to the exalted one:

'Becoming, becoming, venerable, it is called. OK now in what respect, venerable, becoming is?'

'And the aspect of lust and ripeness, Ānanda, the action, if it would not be, OK now also the becoming by lust, could it be fathomed?'

'As for this not, venerable.'

'OK thus Ānanda: action the field, cognition the seed, longing the moisture. Not knowing the obstructions, for beings with yokes of longing for lower aspects, cognition is established. So is the stretching forth, the production towards a following becoming.

And the aspect of form and ripeness, Ānanda, the action, if it would not be, OK now also the becoming by form, could it be fathomed?'

'As for this not, venerable.'

'OK thus Ānanda: action the field, cognition the seed, longing the moisture. Not knowing the obstructions, for beings with yokes of longing for medium aspects, cognition is established. So is the stretching forth, the production towards a following becoming.

And the aspect of without form and ripeness, Ānanda, the action, if it would not be, OK now also the becoming by without form, could it be fathomed?'

'As for this not, venerable.'

'OK thus Ānanda: action the field, cognition the seed, longing the moisture. Not knowing the obstructions, for beings with yokes of longing for higher aspects, cognition is established. So is the stretching forth, the production towards a following becoming.

OK so, Ānanda, becoming is.'

Calm plus Understanding (AN 2.32)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Dukanipātapāḷi
Paṭhamapaṇṇāsakaṃ

'These two, almsmen, principles have a share in knowing. Which two?

And calm and understanding.

Calm, almsmen, when cultivated, what settlement does it partake in?

Mind is cultivated.

Mind cultivated, what settlement does it partake in?

What passion is, that is gotten rid of.

Understanding, almsmen, when cultivated, what settlement does it partake in?

Wisdom is cultivated.

Wisdom cultivated, what settlement does it partake in?

What not knowing is, that is gotten rid of.

Or stained from passion, almsmen, mind is not emancipated, or stained from not knowing, wisdom is not cultivated.

OK thus, almsmen, with dispassion for passion, the mentality for emancipation; with dispassion for not knowing, the wisdom for emancipation.'

Calm plus Understanding (SN 43.2)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Saḷāyatanavaggo
Asaṅkhatasaṃyuttaṃ
Paṭhamavaggo
Samathavipassanāsuttaṃ

'I shall point out to you, almsmen, and the uninclined and the way heading for the uninclined. Hear that.

And which, almsmen, the uninclined?

What, almsmen, is barrenness of lust, barrenness of hate, barrenness of delusion, this is called, almsmen, uninclined.

And which, almsmen, way heading for the uninclined?'

And calm and understanding, this is called, almsmen, the way heading for the uninclined.

OK thus, almsmen, I have pointed out to you the uninclined, pointed out the way heading for the uninclined. What, almsmen, should be done by a predecessor for the welfare of hearers, taking it up with mercy, out of mercy, that is done by me for you. These are, almsmen, roots of trees, these are empty homes; radiate, almsmen, don't be negligent, don't become regretful afterwards. This is our instruction to you.'

Cessation of Action (SN 35.146)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Saḷāyatanavaggo
Saḷāyatanasaṃyuttaṃ
Navapurāṇavaggo
Kammanirodhasuttaṃ

'I shall point out, almsmen, former plus new actions, cessation of action, and heading for the cessation of action the path. Hear that, pay attention well, I shall talk.

And which, almsmen, former action?

Sight, almsmen, is to be viewed as former action, arranged, intended, to be felt. Tongue is to be viewed as former action; arranged, intended, to be felt. Hearing is to be viewed as former action; arranged, intended, to be felt. Smell is to be viewed as former action; arranged, intended, to be felt. Taste is to be viewed as former action; arranged, intended, to be felt. Body is to be viewed as former action; arranged, intended, to be felt. Intellect is to be viewed as former action; arranged, intended, to be felt. This is called, almsmen, former action.

And which, almsmen, new action?

OK what, almsmen, action one does at present by body, by speech, by intellect. This is called, almsmen, new action.

And which, almsmen, cessation of action?

OK what, almsmen, emancipation one touches by cessation of action by body, of action by speech, of action by intellect. This is called, almsmen, cessation of action.

And which, almsmen, path heading for the cessation of action?

Just this noble eight-membered way viz. right view, right attitude, right speech, right doing, right way of life, right exertion,

right meditation, right concentration. This is called, almsmen, the path heading for the cessation of action.

OK thus, almsmen, is by me pointed out former action, pointed out new action, pointed out cessation of action, pointed out the path heading for the cessation of action. OK what, almsmen, should be done by a predecessor for the welfare of hearers, taking it up with mercy, out of mercy, that is done by me for you. These are, almsmen, roots of trees, these are empty homes; radiate, almsmen, don't be negligent, don't become regretful afterwards. This is our instruction to you.'

Characteristics of the Inclined (AN 3.47-48)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Tikanipātapāḷi
Saṅkhatalakkhaṇasuttaṃ

AN 3.47

'These three, almsmen, are the inclined characteristics of the inclined. Which three? Arising is to be fathomed, passing is to be fathomed, alteration when stood is to be fathomed. OK these, almsmen, are the three inclined characteristics of the inclined.'

AN 3.48

'These three, almsmen, are the uninclined characteristics of the uninclined. Which three? No arising is to be fathomed, no passing is to be fathomed, no alteration when stood is to be fathomed. OK these, almsmen, are the three uninclined characteristics of the uninclined.'

Characteristics of not Self (SN 22.59)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Khandhavaggo
Upayavaggo
Anattalakkhaṇasuttaṃ

On one occasion the exalted one dwells at the deer park at Isipatana, at Bārāṇasi. OK there the exalted one addressed the almsmen of the group of five:

'Almsmen'

Those almsmen replied to the exalted one:

'Venerable sir'

The exalted one said this:

'Form, almsmen, is not self. And form, almsmen, if it would be for this self, this not would lead form to oppression and you would get at form: 'My form be so, as my form was not so'. OK and from what, almsmen, form is not self, from that form leads to oppression and you not get at form: 'My form be so, as my form was not so'.

Feeling, almsmen, is not self. And feeling, almsmen, if it would be for this self, this not would lead feeling to oppression and you would get at feeling: 'My feeling be so, as my feeling was not so'. OK and from what, almsmen, feeling is not self, from that feeling leads to oppression and you not get at feeling: 'My feeling be so, as my feeling was not so'.

Perception, almsmen, is not self. And perception, almsmen, for this self, if it becomes, this not would lead perception to oppression and you would get at perception: 'My perception be so, as my perception was not so'. OK and from what, almsmen, perception is not self, from that perception leads to oppression and you not get at perception: 'My perception be so, as my perception was not so'.

Inclinations, almsmen, is not self. And inclination, almsmen, if it would be for this self, this not would lead inclination to oppression and you would get at inclination: 'My inclinations be so, as my inclinations were not so'. OK and from what, almsmen, inclinations are not self, from that inclinations lead to oppression and you not get at inclinations: 'My inclinations be so, as my inclination was not so'.

Cognition, almsmen, is not self. And cognition, almsmen, if it would be for this self, this not would lead cognition to oppression and you would get at cognition: 'My cognition be so, as my cognition was not so'. OK and from what, almsmen, cognition is not self, from that cognition leads to oppression and you not get at cognition: 'My cognition be so, as my cognition was not so'.

What is it that you deem, almsmen, is form or stable or unstable?'

'Unstable, venerable'

'What is yet unstable, is that sufferingly or happily?'

'Sufferingly, venerable'

'What is yet unstable, sufferingly, the principle for change, is that now sound to regard: 'This is of me, this is I exist, this to me is self'?'

'As for this not, venerable.'

... feeling ... perception ... inclinations ... cognition stable or unstable?'

'Unstable, venerable'

'What is yet unstable, is that sufferingly or happily?'

'Sufferingly, venerable'

'What is yet unstable, sufferingly, the principle for change, is that now sound to regard: 'This is of me, this is I exist, this to me is self'?'

'As for this not, venerable.'

'Therefore, almsmen, whatever form, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, all form 'Not this is of me, not this is I exist, not this to me is self'. So is this essentially, with right wisdom, to be viewed.

Whatever feeling, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, all feeling 'Not this is of me, not this is I exist, not this to me is self'. So is this essentially, with right wisdom, to be viewed.

Whatever perception, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, all perception 'Not this is of me, not this is I exist, not this to me is self'. So is this essentially, with right wisdom, to be viewed.

Whatever inclinations, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, all inclinations 'Not this is of me, not this is I exist, not this to me is self'. So is this essentially, with right wisdom, to be viewed.

Whatever cognition, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, all cognition 'Not this is of me, not this is I exist, not this to me is self'. So is this essentially, with right wisdom, to be viewed.

Seeing so, almsmen, having learned, the hearer of what is noble gets fed up also on form, gets fed up also on feeling, gets fed up also on perception, gets fed up also on inclinations, gets fed up also on cognition. Fed up, he becomes dispassionate; from dispassion he is emancipated. Upon emancipation, thus emancipated, the knowledge is. He fathoms 'Birth is barren, the clergy conduct spent, done is what ought to be done, no further gain of presence'.'

This said the exalted one.

Pleased, the almsmen of the group of five welcomed the exalted one's talk. And while this explanation was yet being recited, the almsmen of the group of five were without by drains taking it up; the minds thus emancipated.

Clergyman Uṇṇābha (SN 48.42)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Indriyasaṃyuttaṃ
Uṇṇābhabrāhmaṇasuttaṃ

Situated at Sāvatthi.

OK, then clergyman Uṇṇābha approached there where the exalted one was. Having approached the exalted one they greeted together. OK, at one end seated clergyman Uṇṇābha said this to the exalted one:

'These five, dear Gotama, strengths of so and so realms, of so and so pasturelands, do not involve one another's realms and pasturelands. Which five? Strength of sight, strength of hearing, strength of smell, strength of taste, strength of body. OK now, dear Gotama, of these five strengths of so and so realms, of so and so pasturelands, they do not involve one another's realms and pasturelands; what is the resort and what does it involve from those realms and pasturelands?'

'These five, clergyman, strengths of so and so realms, of so and so pasturelands do not involve one another's realms and pasturelands. Which five? Strength of sight, strength of hearing, strength of smell, strength of taste, strength of body. OK these, clergyman, five strengths of so and so realms, of so and so pasturelands they do not involve one another's realms and pasturelands; intellect is the resort, it involves just the intellect from those realms and pasturelands.'

'Yet for intellect, dear Gotama, what is the resort?'

'OK for intellect, clergyman, meditation is the resort.'

'Yet for meditation, dear Gotama, what is the resort?'

'OK for meditation, clergyman, emancipation is the resort.'

'Yet for emancipation, dear Gotama, what is the resort?'

'OK for emancipation, clergyman, peace is the resort.'

'Yet for peace, dear Gotama, what is the resort?'

'You went over, clergyman, the question; you were not able to grasp the limit of the question. For immersing in peace, clergyman, the clergy conduct is spent. Peace is the relief, peace fulfils the stopping.'

OK then clergyman Uṇṇābha welcoming, appreciating, the exalted one's talk, rose, having saluted the exalted one, having kept the right, set out. OK then the exalted one, when clergyman Uṇṇābha had recently set out, addressed the almsman:

'Also as that, almsmen, or a roofed home or a roofed pavilion with an eastern window, at sunrise, a ray of light entering the eastern window, where would it be established?'

'At the western wall, venerable.'

'OK just so, almsmen, the confidence of the clergyman Uṇṇābha in the Tathāgata is set, born at the root, established, firm, not to be shattered or by recluse or by clergyman or by a god or by Māra or by Brahma or by anything in the world. This for if, almsmen, in the occasion the clergyman Uṇṇābha would have done his time: the yoke does not exist following by which, connected by the yoke, the clergyman Uṇṇābha would come back to this world.'

Concentration (SN 45.28)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Mahāvaggo
Maggasaṃyuttaṃ
Micchattavaggo
Samādhisuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

'I shall point out to you, almsmen, the noble right concentration, with its adjacents, with its requirements. Hear that.

And which, almsmen, noble right concentration with its adjacents, with its requirements? Viz. right view, right attitude, right speech, right doing, right way of life, right exertion, right meditation; OK what, almsmen, by these seven members, as requirements, is the focus of mind, this is called, almsmen, noble right concentration, thus also with its adjacents, thus also with its requirements.'

Consumed (SN 22.79)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Khandhasaṃyuttaṃ
Khajjanīyasuttaṃ

Situated at Sāvatthi.

'For whatever, almsmen, or recluses or clergymen remembering various prior abodes, they remember all these five masses plus the taking up together or they remember certain.

Which five?

'With such form I was in past durations' thus or for, almsmen, the remembrance he remembers just form. 'With such feeling I was in past durations' thus or for, almsmen, the remembrance he remembers just feeling. 'With such perception I was in past durations' thus or for, almsmen, the remembrance he remembers just perception. 'With such inclinations I was in past durations' thus or for, almsmen, the remembrance he remembers just inclinations. 'With such cognition I was in past durations' thus or for, almsmen, the remembrance he remembers just cognition.

And what, almsmen, would they say is form?

OK thus it deforms, almsmen, from that it is called form. Deforms with what? Deforms with cold, deforms with hot, deforms with hunger, deforms with thirst, deforms also with the touch of the gadfly, mosquito, heat wave, creepers. OK thus it deforms, almsmen, from that it is called form.

And what, almsmen, would they say is feeling?

OK thus it gets to feel, almsmen, from that it is called feeling. And what does it gets to feel? It gets to feel also happily, it gets to feel also sufferingly, it gets to feel also neither happily nor sufferingly. OK thus it gets to feel, almsmen, from that it is called feeling.

And what, almsmen, would they say is perception?

OK thus it perceives, almsmen, from that it is called perception. And what it perceives? Also dark it perceives, also yellow it perceives, also red it perceives, also light it perceives. OK thus it perceives, almsmen, from that it is called perception.

And what, almsmen, would they say are inclinations?

OK thus they incline the inclined, almsmen, from that it is called inclinations. And what are the inclined they incline? form for the form-ness is the inclined they incline, feeling for the feeling-ness is the inclined they incline, perception for the perception-ness is the inclined they incline, inclinations for the inclination-ness is the inclined they incline, cognition for the cognition-ness is the inclined they incline. OK thus they incline the inclined, almsmen, from that it is called inclinations.

And what, almsmen, would they say is cognition?

OK thus it cognises, almsmen, from that it is called cognition. And what it cognises? Also sour it cognises, also bitter it cognises, also sharp it cognises, also sweet it cognises, also soapy it cognises, also not soapy it cognises, also salty it cognises, also bland it cognises. OK thus it cognises, almsmen, from that it is called cognition.

There, almsmen, having learned, a hearer of what is noble reflects thus:

'OK I am presently consumed with form, for periods in the past I was consumed with form just so,
also as that I am presently consumed with current form.
OK and like I yet would welcome the form not yet come, for periods not yet come
I also would be consumed with form just so,
also as that I am presently consumed with current form.'

Thus reflecting he has no expectation in the form not yet come. He does not welcome the form not yet come. He opposed, from disenchantment, from dispassion, from cessation, to the current form.

... feeling ... perception ... inclinations ... cognition ...

What is it that you deem, almsmen, is form or stable or unstable?'

'Unstable, venerable.'

'What is yet unstable is that or sufferingly or happily?'

'Sufferingly, venerable.'

'What is yet unstable, sufferingly, the principle for change, now is that sound to regard: 'This is of me, this is I exist, this to me is self'?'

'As for this not, venerable.'

... feeling ... perception ... inclinations ... cognition ...

'Therefore this, almsmen, 'whatever form, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, all form so this is essentially with right wisdom to be viewed as 'Not this is of me, not this is the I exist, not this is to me self'.

... feeling ... perception ... inclinations ... cognition ...

This is called, almsmen, a hearer of what is noble who decreases, not increases; who gives up, not takes up; who turns from, not turns to; who disperses, not congregates.

And what does he decreases, not increases? Form he decreases, not increases. Feeling ... Perception ... Inclinations ... Cognition ...

And what does he gives up, not takes up? Form he gives up, not takes up. Feeling ... Perception ... Inclinations ... Cognition ...

And what does he turns from, not turns to? Form he turns from, not turns to. Feeling ... Perception ... Inclinations ... Cognition ...

And what does he disperses, not congregates? Form he disperses, not congregates. Feeling ... Perception ... Inclinations ... Cognition ...

Seeing so, almsmen, having learned, a hearer of what is noble gets fed up also on form, ... feeling ... perception ... inclinations ... cognition ... Fed up, he becomes dispassionate; from dispassion he is emancipated. Upon emancipation, thus emancipated, the knowledge is. He fathoms 'Birth is barren, the clergy conduct spent, done is what ought to be done, no further gain of presence'. This is called, almsmen, the almsman who neither increases nor decreases.

Stood having decreased, he neither gives up nor takes up. Stood having given up, he neither turns from nor turns to. Stood having turned from, he neither disperses nor congregates. He stood having dispersed.

And what does he neither increases nor decrease?

Stood having decreased form, he neither increases nor decreases it. ... feeling ... perception ... inclinations ... cognition ... He stood having decreased.

And what does he neither gives up nor takes up?

Stood having given up form, he neither gives it up nor takes it up. ... feeling ... perception ... inclinations ... cognition ... He stood having given up.

And what does he neither turns from nor turns to?

Stood having turned from form, he neither turns from nor turns too it. ... feeling ... perception ... inclinations ... cognition ... He stood having turned from.

And what does he neither disperses nor congregates?

Stood having dispersed form, he neither disperses not congregates it. … feeling … perception … inclinations … cognition … He stood having dispersed.

OK with the mind so emancipated, almsmen, the gods, with Inda, with Brahma, with their wives and offspring, like from far, they hail the almsman:

> Hail you thoroughbred man,
> hail you highest man.
> We are not acquainted with of what you > radiate also what the relying on is.'

Crying (AN 3.108)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Tikanipātapāḷi
Tatiyapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Sambodhavaggo
Ruṇṇasuttaṃ

'This is crying, almsmen, in the discipline of what is noble, this what is: singing. This is madness, almsmen, in the discipline of what is noble, this what is: dancing. This is juvenile, almsmen, in the discipline of what is noble, this what is: excessively laughing showing teeth.

Therefor, almsmen, burn your bridges about singing, burn your bridges about dancing, Gladdened by the principle enough for you the existing smile is a measured smile.'

Cultivations of Concentration (AN 4.41)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Catukkanipātapāḷi
Paṭhamapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Rohitassavaggo
Samādhibhāvanāsuttaṃ

'These four, almsmen, cultivations of concentration. Which four?

- It exists, almsmen, a cultivation of concentration, when cultivated, when made much of, leads to a happy dwelling having viewed the principle.
- It exists, almsmen, a cultivation of concentration, when cultivated, when made much of, leads to the acquisition of vision for knowledge.
- It exists, almsmen, a cultivation of concentration, when cultivated, when made much of, leads to meditative awareness.
- It exists, almsmen, a cultivation of concentration, when cultivated, when made much of, leads to barrenness of drains.

And which, almsman, cultivation of concentration, when cultivated, when made much of, leads to a happy dwelling having viewed the principle? Here, almsmen, an almsman is just withdrawing from lusts ... first radiance ... second radiance .... third radiance ... he dwells having obtained the fourth radiance. This, almsmen, cultivation of concentration, when made much of, leads to dwell happily having viewed the principle.

And which, almsmen, cultivation of concentration, when cultivated, when made much of, leads to acquisition of vision for knowledge? Here, almsmen, an almsman pays attention to the perception of light, he looks after the perception of the day. As from day, like that the night. As night like that from the day. Thus with openness of mind, by not covered up, the mind cultivates with shining. This, almsmen, cultivation of concentration, when cultivated, when made much of, leads to the acquisition of vision for knowledge.

And which, almsmen, cultivation of concentration, when cultivated, when made much of, leads to meditative awareness? Here, almsmen, feelings to an almsman are found out as they arise, found out as they do attend, found out as they go on as a cloud in settlement. ... perceptions ... thoughts ... This, almsmen, cultivation of concentration, when cultivated, when made a lot of, leads to meditative awareness.

And which, almsmen, cultivation of concentration, when cultivated, when made much of, leads to barrenness of drains? Here, almsmen, an almsman on the five masses plus the taking up dwells looking at the going up plus the going away: 'Thus, form. Thus, rise of form. Thus, settling down of form ... feeling ... perception ... inclinations ... cognition.' This, almsmen, cultivation of concentration, when cultivated, when made a lot of, leads to barrenness of drains.

OK these, almsmen, four cultivations of concentration. And this was yet by me, almsmen, put together, a talk to across the goal, concerning Puṇṇaka's question.

For counting on the other plus the others in the world, on what is stirred, it does not exist anywhere in the world;
Existing is the smokeless, trouble free, hungerless, as he crossed over birth plus ageing thus, I say.'

Dependent-Co-Arising (SN 12.1)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Nidānavaggo
Nidānasaṃyuttaṃ
Buddhavaggo
Paṭiccasamuppādasuttaṃ

So I learned:

On one occasion the exalted one dwells at Jetavane, Anāthapiṇḍika's park at Sāvatthi. OK, there the exalted one addressed the almsmen:

'Almsmen'

Those almsmen replied to the exalted one:

'Venerable sir'

The exalted one said this:

'I shall point out to you, almsmen, a dependent-co-arising. Hear that, pay attention well, I shall talk.'

OK, so those almsmen replied to the exalted one:

'Venerable'

The exalted one said this:

'And which, almsmen, dependent-co-arising?

With support of not knowing, almsmen, inclinations. With support of inclinations, cognition. With support of cognition, name plus form. With support of name plus form, hexad-base. With support of hexad-base, touch. With support of touch, feeling. With support of feeling, longing. With support of longing, taking up. With support of taking up, becoming. With support of becoming, birth. With support of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest appear. So for this entire mass of suffering the rise is.

This is called, almsmen, dependent-co-arising.

However, without a remainder from dispassion plus cessation of not knowing, cessation of inclinations. With cessation of inclinations, cessation of cognition. With cessation of cognition, cessation of name plus form. With cessation of name plus form, cessation of hexad-base. With cessation of hexad-base, cessation of touch. With cessation of touch, cessation of feeling. With cessation of feeling, cessation of longing. With cessation of longing, cessation of taking up. With cessation of taking up, cessation of becoming. With cessation of becoming, cessation of birth. With cessation of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest cease. So for this entire mass of suffering the cessation is.'

This said the exalted one.

Pleased, those almsmen welcomed the talk from the exalted one.

Division (SN 12.2)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Nidānavaggo
Nidānasaṃyuttaṃ
Buddhavaggo
Vibhaṅgasuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

'I shall point out, I shall divide, to you, almsmen, a dependent-co-arising. Hear that, pay attention well, I shall talk.'

OK, so those almsmen replied to the exalted one:

'Venerable'

The exalted one said this:

'And which, almsmen, dependent-co-arising?

With support of not knowing, almsmen, inclinations. With support of inclinations, cognition. With support of cognition, name plus form. With support of name plus form, hexad-base. With support of hexad-base, touch. With support of touch, feeling. With support of feeling, longing. With support of longing, taking up. With support of taking up, becoming. With support of becoming, birth. With support of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest appear. So for this entire mass of suffering the rise is.

And which, almsmen, ageing plus death?

What of these or those beings into this or that collection of beings is the ageing, decrepitude, brokenness of teeth, greyness of hair, wrinkling of skin, decrease of vitality, decay of strengths, this is called ageing. What of these or those beings into this or that collection of beings is the passing away, falling away, breaking up, vanishing, the Death, death, the doing time, the breaking up of the masses, the laying down of the carcass, this is called death. Thus and this ageing and this death, this is called, almsmen, ageing plus death.

And which, almsmen, birth?

What of these or those beings into this or that collection of beings is the birth, being born, descending, forthcoming, production, manifestation, of masses, acquirement of bases, this is called, almsmen, birth.

And which, almsmen, becoming?

These three, almsmen, becomings: becoming by lust, becoming by form, becoming by without form; this is called, almsmen, becoming.

And which, almsmen, taking up?

These four, almsmen, taking ups: taking up lusts, taking up views, taking up behaviours plus manners, taking up theories about self; this is called, almsmen, taking up.

And which, almsmen, longing?

These six, almsmen, bodies for longing: longing for forms, longing for sounds, longing for scents, longing for flavours, longing for to be touched, longing for principles; this is called, almsmen, longing.

And which, almsmen, feeling?

These six, almsman, bodies for feeling: touch with sight born feeling, touch with hearing born feeling, touch with smell born feeling, touch with taste born feeling, touch with body born feeling, touch with intellect born feeling; this is called, almsmen, feeling.

And which, almsmen, touch?

These six, almsmen, bodies for touch: touch with sight, touch with hearing, touch with smell, touch with taste, touch with body, touch with intellect; this is called, almsmen, touch.

And which, almsmen, hexad-base?

Base for sight, base for hearing, base for smell, base for taste, base for body, base for intellect this is called, almsmen, hexad-base.

And which, almsmen, name plus form?

Feeling, perception, intention, touch, attention; this is called name. And the four great essences and of the four great essences the taking it up as form; this is called form. Thus and this name and this form, this is called, almsmen, name plus form.

And which, almsmen, cognition?

These six, almsmen, bodies for cognition: cognition by sight, cognition by hearing, cognition by smell, cognition by taste, cognition by body, cognition by intellect; this is called, almsmen, cognition.

And which, almsmen, inclinations?

These three, almsmen, inclinations: inclination for body, inclination for speech, inclination for mind; these are called, almsmen, inclinations.

And which, almsmen, not knowing?

OK what is, almsmen, ignorance about suffering, ignorance about the rise of suffering, ignorance about the cessation of suffering, ignorance about the path heading for the cessation of suffering; this is called, almsmen, not knowing.

OK thus, almsmen, with support of not knowing, inclinations. With support of inclinations, cognition. With support of cognition, name plus form. With support of name plus form, hexad-base. With support of hexad-base, touch. With support of touch, feeling. With support of feeling, longing. With support of longing, taking up. With support of taking up, becoming. With support of becoming, birth. With support of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest appearing. So for this entire mass of suffering the rise is.

However, without a remainder from dispassion plus cessation of not knowing, cessation of inclinations. With cessation of inclinations, cessation of cognition. With cessation of cognition, cessation of name plus form. With cessation of name plus form, cessation of hexad-base. With cessation of hexad-base, cessation of touch. With cessation of touch, cessation of feeling. With cessation of feeling, cessation of longing. With cessation of longing, cessation of taking up. With cessation of taking up, cessation of becoming. With cessation of becoming, cessation of birth. With cessation of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest cease. So for this entire mass of suffering the cessation is.'

Division (SN 45.8)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Mahāvaggo
Avijjāvaggo
Vibhaṅgasuttaṃ

Situated at Sāvatthi.

'I shall point out, I shall divide, to you, almsmen, the noble eight-membered way. Hear that, pay attention well, I shall talk'.

OK, so those almsmen replied to the exalted one:

'Venerable'

The exalted one said this:

'And which, almsmen, noble eight-membered way? viz. right view, right attitude, right speech, right doing, right way of life, right exertion, right meditation, right concentration.

And which, almsmen, right view?

OK what is, almsmen, knowledge about suffering, knowledge about the rise of suffering, knowledge about the cessation of suffering, knowledge about the path heading for the cessation of suffering. This is called, almsmen, right view.

And which, almsmen, right attitude?

OK what is, almsmen, an attitude of abstinence, an attitude without anger, an attitude without harm. This is called, almsmen, right attitude.

And which, almsmen, right speech?

OK what is, almsmen, refrainment from false theorization, refrainment from gossip, refrainment from abusive speech, refrainment from deceptive wording. This is called, almsmen, right speech.

And which, almsmen, right doing?

OK what is, almsmen, refrainment from attacking the breath, refrainment from taking the not given, refrainment from unclergy conduct. This is called, almsmen, right doing.

And which, almsmen, right way of life?

Here almsmen, the hearer of what is noble gives up a wrong way of life, constructs a living by a right way of life. This is called, almsmen, right way of life.

And which, almsmen, right exertion?

Here, almsmen, an almsman exerts, creates interest, applies vigour, strains, confronts the mind for the non-arising of unarisen evil unwholesome principles. He exerts, creates interest, applies vigour, strains, confronts, the mind for the rejection of arisen evil unwholesome principles. He exerts, creates interest, applies vigour, strains, confronts the mind, for the arising of wholesome principles. He exerts, creates interest, applies vigour, strains, confronts the mind, for the state of non-confusion, for the increase, for the abundance, for the pouring over, of arisen wholesome principles. This is called, almsmen, right exertion.

And which, almsmen, right meditation?

Here, almsmen, an almsman looking into body dwells in body as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; looking into feelings dwells in feelings as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; looking into mind dwells in mind as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; looking into principles dwells in principles as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world. This is called, almsmen, right meditation.

And which, almsmen, right concentration?

Here, almsmen, an almsmen is just withdrawing from lusts, withdrawing from unwholesome principles, with thoughts with thinking, withdrawal-borne the pleasantness plus happiness, he dwells having obtained the first radiance.

From the ease of thoughts plus thinking, inner serenity, determination of mind, without thoughts without thinking, concentration-borne the pleasantness plus happiness, he dwells having obtained the second radiance.

And pleasant and objective from dispassion, he dwells meditative and aware, and the happiness with the body he does experience therefor what nobles disclose: 'An objective meditator, a happy dweller', he dwells having obtained the third radiance.

And from the rejection of happiness and from the rejection of suffering, from the heading to rest of the just prior contentment plus discontentment, neither happily nor sufferingly, the objectiveness by the purity of meditation, he dwells having obtained the fourth radiance.

This is called, almsmen, right concentration.'

Division (SN 47.40)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Mahāvaggo
Satipaṭṭhānasaṃyuttaṃ
Ananussutavaggo
Vibhaṅgasuttaṃ

'I shall point out to you, almsmen, and the attendance of meditation, and the cultivation of the attendance of meditation, and heading for the cultivation of the attendance of meditation the path. Hear that.

And which, almsmen, attendance of meditation?

Here, almsmen, and almsman looking into body dwells in body as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; looking into feelings dwells in feelings as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; looking into mind dwells in mind as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; looking into principles dwells in principles as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world. This is called, almsmen, the attendance of meditation.

And which, almsmen, the cultivation of the attendance of meditation?

Here, almsmen, an almsman is looking into the rise of principles as he dwells in body, is looking into the passing of principles as he dwells in body, is looking into the rise plus passing of principles as he dwells in body as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; is looking into the rise of principles as he dwells in feelings, is looking into the passing of principles as he dwells in feelings, is looking into the rise plus passing of principles as he dwells in feelings as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; is looking into the rise of principles as he dwells in mind, is looking into the passing of principles as he dwells in mind, is looking into the rise plus passing of principles as he dwells in mind as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; is looking into the rise of principles as he dwells in principles, is looking into the passing of principles as he dwells in principles, is looking into the rise plus passing of principles as he dwells in principles as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world. This is called, almsmen, the cultivation of the attendance of meditation.

And which, almsmen, the path heading for the cultivation of the attendance of meditation?

Just this noble eight-membered way, viz. right view, right attitude, right speech, right doing, right way of life, right exertion, right meditation, right concentration. This is called, almsmen, the path heading for the cultivation of the attendance of meditation.'

Emptiness, concise (MN 121)

Majjhima Nikāya
Cūḷasuññatasuttaṃ

So I learned:

On one occasion the exalted one dwells at the eastern park, at Migāramātupāsāda, at Sāvatthi. OK, then senior Ānanda, on an evening occasion, returned from seclusion, approached there where the exalted one was. Having approached the exalted one, having saluted, he sat down at one end. OK, at one end seated senior Ānanda said this to the exalted one:

'On this one occasion, venerable, the exalted one he dwells amongst the Sakyans at a market town of the Sakyans, named Nagaraka. There I, venerable, learned in front of, received in front of, the exalted one: 'I by dwelling with emptiness, Ānanda, at present dwell a lot'. I hope this by me, venerable, well learned, well grasped, well payed attention to, well retained?'

'Surely you got this, Ānanda, well learned, well grasped, well payed attention to, well retained. I also in the prior, Ānanda, also at present, dwell at lot by dwelling with emptiness. Also as that, Ānanda, this Migāramātupāsāda is empty of elephants, cows, horses and meres, empty of gold and silver, empty of female and male gatherings and so this exist, the non-emptiness; this what is the generalization depending on the order of almsmen. OK just so, Ānanda, an almsmen not paying attention to the perception of village, not paying attention to the perception of men, pays attention to the generalization depending on the perception of forest. For him at the perception of forest the mind jumps at, reconciles, coincides, directs. So he fathoms 'What might be the wearinesses depending on the perception of village, here those not exist. What might be the wearinesses depending on the perception of men, here those not exist. And so this exist, the moderation of weariness; this what is the generalization depending on the perception of forest.' He fathoms 'This empty; from the perception of village the perception is gone', fathoms 'This empty; from the perception of men the perception is gone', 'And so this exist, the non-emptiness; this what is the generalization depending on the perception of forest'. OK thus for what is not there by that he regards that empty, yet what is left there therefor he fathoms 'Soothed this exists'. So also for him this is, Ānanda, being as it is, the undistorted clear entry into emptiness.

And further following, Ānanda, an almsmen not paying attention to the perception of men, not paying attention to the perception of forest, pays attention to the generalization depending on the perception of earth. For him at the perception of earth the mind jumps at, reconciles, coincides, directs. Also as that, Ānanda, a bull's hide, well spread by a hundred pegs, is having the folds gone away, OK just so, Ānanda, an almsmen what of this earth are the highs and lows, rivers with difficult passages, places with stumps and thorns, irregular rocks, is not paying attention to that all; he pays attention to the generalization depending on the perception of earth. For him at the perception of earth the mind jumps at, reconciles, coincides, directs. So he fathoms 'What might be the wearinesses depending on the perception of men here those not exist. What might be the wearinesses depending on the perception of forest, here those not exist. And so this exist, the moderation of weariness; this what is the generalization depending on the perception of earth.' He fathoms 'This empty; from the perception of men the perception is gone', fathoms 'This empty; from the perception of forest the perception is gone', 'And so this exist, the moderation of weariness; this what is the generalization depending on the perception of earth.' OK thus for what is not there by that he regards that empty, yet what is left there therefor he fathoms 'Soothed this exists'. So also for him this is, Ānanda, being as it is, the undistorted clear entry into emptiness.

And further following, Ānanda, an almsmen not paying attention to the perception of forest, not paying attention to the perception of earth, pays attention to the generalization depending on the perception of endless air as base. For him at the perception of endless air as base the mind jumps at, reconciles, coincides, directs. So he fathoms 'What might be the wearinesses depending on the perception of forest here those not exist. What might be the wearinesses depending on the perception of earth, here those not exist. And so this exist, the moderation of weariness; this what is the generalization depending on the perception of endless air as base.' He fathoms 'This empty; from the perception of forest the perception is gone', fathoms 'This empty; from the perception of earth the perception is gone', 'And so this exist, the moderation of weariness; this what is the generalization depending on the perception of endless air as base.' OK, so for what is not there by that he regards that empty, yet what is left there therefor he fathoms 'Soothed this exists'. So also for him this is, Ānanda, being as it is, the undistorted clear entry into emptiness.

And further following, Ānanda, an almsmen not paying attention to the perception of earth, not paying attention to the perception of endless air as base, pays attention to the generalization depending on the perception of endless cognition as base. For him at the perception of endless cognition as base the mind jumps at, reconciles, coincides, directs. So he fathoms 'What might be the wearinesses depending on the perception of earth here those not exist. What might be the wearinesses depending on the perception of endless air as base, here those not exist. And so this exist, the moderation of weariness; this what is the generalization depending on the perception of endless cognition as base.' He fathoms 'This empty; from the perception of earth the perception is gone', fathoms 'This empty; from the perception of endless air as base the perception is gone', 'And so this exist, the moderation of weariness; this what is the generalization depending on the perception of endless cognition as base.' OK, so for what is not there by that he regards that empty, yet what is left there therefor he fathoms 'Soothed this exists'. So also for him this is, Ānanda, being as it is, the undistorted clear entry into emptiness.

And further following, Ānanda, an almsmen not paying attention to the perception of endless air as base, not paying attention to the perception of endless cognition as base, pays attention to the generalization depending on the perception of objectlessness as base. For him at the perception of objectlessness as base the mind jumps at, reconciles, coincides, directs. So he fathoms 'What might be the wearinesses depending on the perception of endless air as base, here those not exist. What might be the wearinesses depending on the perception of endless cognition as base, here those not exist. And so this exist, the moderation of weariness; this what is the generalization depending on the perception of objectlessness as base.' He fathoms 'This empty; from the perception of endless air as base the perception is gone', fathoms 'This empty; from the perception of endless cognition as base the perception is gone', 'And so this exist, the moderation of weariness; this what is the generalization depending on the perception of objectlessness as base.' OK, so for what is not there by that he regards that empty, yet what is left there therefor he fathoms 'Soothed this exists'. So also for him this is, Ānanda, being as it is, the undistorted clear entry into emptiness.

And further following, Ānanda, an almsmen not paying attention to the perception of endless cognition as base, not paying attention to the perception of objectlessness as base, pays attention to the generalization depending on the perception of neither perception nor no perception as base. For him at the perception of neither perception nor no perception as base the mind jumps at, reconciles, coincides, directs. So he fathoms 'What might be the wearinesses depending on the perception of endless cognition as base, here those not exist. What might be the wearinesses depending on the perception of objectlessness as base, here those not exist. And so this exist, the moderation of weariness; this what is the generalization depending on the perception of neither perception nor no perception as base.' He fathoms 'This empty; from the perception of endless cognition as base the perception is gone', fathoms 'This empty; from the perception of objectlessness as base the perception is gone', 'And so this exist, the moderation of weariness; this what is the generalization depending on the perception of neither perception nor no perception as base.' OK, so for what is not there by that he regards that empty, yet what is left there therefor he fathoms 'Soothed this exists'. So also for him this is, Ānanda, being as it is, the undistorted clear entry into emptiness.

And further following, Ānanda, an almsmen not paying attention to the perception of objectlessness as base, not paying attention to the perception of neither perception nor no perception as base, pays attention to the generalization depending on the absence of indication mental-concentration. For him at the absence of indication mental-concentration the mind jumps at, reconciles, coincides, directs. So he fathoms 'What might be the wearinesses depending on the perception of objectlessness as base, here those not exist. What might be the wearinesses depending on the perception of neither perception nor no perception as base, here those not exist. And so this exist, the moderation of weariness; this what is just this body depending on the hexad-base support for life'. He fathoms 'This empty; from the perception of objectlessness as base the perception is gone', fathoms 'This empty; from the perception of neither perception nor no perception as base the perception is gone', 'And so this exist, the non-emptiness; this what is just this body depending on the hexad-base support for life.' OK, so for what is not there by that he regards that empty, yet what is left there therefor he fathoms 'Soothed this exists'. So also for him this is, Ānanda, being as it is, the undistorted clear entry into emptiness.

And further following, Ānanda, an almsmen not paying attention to the perception of objectlessness as base, not paying attention to the perception of neither perception nor no perception as base, pays attention to the generalization depending on the absence of indication mental-concentration. For him at the absence of indication mental-concentration the mind jumps at, reconciles, coincides, directs. So he fathoms 'OK also this absence of indication mental-concentration is arranged, intended', fathoms 'OK yet anything what is arranged, intended, that is unstable; the principle of cessation'. For him thus from knowing, thus from seeing, and the mind is emancipated from the drain of lust, and the mind is emancipated from the drain of becoming, and the minded is emancipated from the drain of not knowing, upon emancipation, thus emancipated, the knowledge is. He fathoms 'Birth is barren, the clergy conduct spent, done is what ought to be done, no further gain of presence'. So he fathoms 'What might be the wearinesses depending on the drain of lust, here those not exist. What might be the wearinesses depending on the drain of becoming, here those not exist. What might be the wearinesses depending on the drain of not knowing, here those not exist. And so this exist, the moderation of weariness; this what is just this body depending on the hexad-base support for life.' He fathoms 'This empty from the drain of lust', fathoms 'This empty from the drain of becoming', fathoms 'This empty from the drain of not knowing, And so this exist, the non-emptiness; this what is just this body depending on the hexad-base support for life.' OK, so for what is not there by that he regards that empty, yet what is left there therefor he fathoms 'Soothed this exists'. So also for him this is, Ānanda, being as it is, the undistorted clean, furthest, without a beyond, entry into emptiness.

Also for whatever, Ānanda, in past durations, or recluses or clergymen obtaining the clean, the furthest, without a beyond, emptiness, they all dwelt obtaining just this clean, furthest, without a beyond, emptiness. Also what for, Ānanda, in durations not yet come, or recluses or clergymen, obtaining the clean, the furthest, without a beyond, emptiness, they all will dwell obtaining just this clean, furthest, without a beyond, emptiness. Also what for, Ānanda, at present, or recluses or clergymen, obtaining the clean, the furthest, without a beyond, emptiness, they all dwell obtaining just this clean, furthest, without a beyond, emptiness. Therefore, Ānanda, 'We shall dwell obtaining the clean, the furthest, without a beyond, emptiness' for so by you guys, Ānanda, it should be trained.'

This said the exalted one.

Forerunner (AN 1.56-57)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Ekakanipātapāḷi
Accharāsaṅghātavaggo

AN 1.56

’Whatever, almsmen, principles, unwholesome, have a share in the unwholesome,
are siding with the unwholesome,
all those have intellect going prior.
Intellect is for those principles first to arise,
just along the unwholesome principles.’

AN 1.57

’Whatever, almsmen, principles, wholesome, have a share in the wholesome,
are siding with the wholesome,
all those have intellect going prior.
Intellect is for these principles first to arise,
just along the wholesome principles.’

From Another Tradition (AN 3.69)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Tikanipātapāḷi
Dutiyapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Mahāvaggo
Aññatitthiyasuttaṃ

'If with, almsmen, wanderers from another tradition, they would ask so: 'These three, Mr, principles. Which three? Passion, hate, delusion. OK these, Mr, three principles. Of these, Mr, three principles, what is the distinction? what is the peculiarity? what is making the so and so?'

You so being asked, almsmen, of them, from the wanderers from another tradition, thus what would you answer?'

'Our principles are, venerable, rooted in the exalted one, guided by the exalted, have the exalted one as resort. As good custom, venerable, may the exalted one just so illuminate the settlement of this talk. Having heard from the exalted one the almsmen will endorse it.'

'By that, almsmen, hear, pay attention well, I shall talk.'

OK, so those almsmen replied to the exalted one:

'Venerable'

The exalted one said this:

'If with, almsmen, wanderers from another tradition, they would ask so:

'These three, Mr, principles. Which three? Passion, hate, delusion. OK these, Mr, three principles. Of these, Mr, three principles, what is the distinction? what is the peculiarity? what is making the so and so?'

You so being asked, almsmen, of them, from the wanderers from another tradition, you should answer so: 'OK, Messrs, Passion, small blame, slow dispassion. Hate, great blame, quick dispassion. Delusion, great blame, slow dispassion.'

'Yet Mr, what is the reason, what the support, there where or unarisen passion arise or passion arisen leads to increase, to abundance?'

'Indication of attractiveness' is to be voiced. 'For that indication of attractiveness, from paying improper attention or unarisen passion arises or arisen passion leads to increase, to abundance. OK this, Messrs, is the reason, the support, there where or unarisen passion arises or arisen passion leads to increase, to abundance.'

'Yet Mr, what is the reason, what the support, there where or unarisen hate arise or hate arisen leads to increase, to abundance?'

'Indication of friction' is to be voiced. 'For that indication of friction, from paying improper attention or unarisen hate arises or arisen hate leads to increase, to abundance. OK this, Messrs, is the reason, the support, there where or unarisen hate arises or arisen hate leads to increase, to abundance.'

'Yet Mr, what is the reason, what the support, there where or unarisen delusion arise or delusion arisen leads to increase, to abundance?'

'Improper attention' is to be voiced. 'For that paying improper attention or unarisen delusion arises or arisen delusion leads to increase, to abundance. OK this, Messrs, is the reason, the support, there where or unarisen delusion arises or arisen delusion leads to increase, to abundance.'

'Yet Mr, what the reason, what the support, there where and like unarisen passion not arises and arisen passion is gotten rid of?'

'Indication of unattractiveness' is to be voiced. For that indication of unattractiveness, from paying proper attention, and like unarisen passion not arises and arisen passion is gotten rid of. OK this, Messrs, the root, this the support, there where and like unarisen passion not arises and arisen passion is gotten rid of.'

'Yet Mr, what the reason, what the support, there where and like unarisen hate not arises and arisen hate is gotten rid of?'

'Lovingness as the mentality for emancipation' is to be voiced. For that lovingness as the mentality for emancipation, from paying proper attention, and like unarisen hate does not arise and arisen hate is gotten rid of. OK this, Messrs, the root, this the support, there where and like unarisen hate does not arise and arisen hate is gotten rid of.'

'Yet Mr, what the reason, what the support, there where and like unarisen delusion does not arise and arisen delusion is gotten rid of?'

'Paying proper attention' is to be voiced. For that from paying proper attention and like unarisen delusion does not arise and delusion is gotten rid of. OK this, Messrs, the root, this the support, there where or unarisen delusion does not arise and delusion is gotten rid of'.'

Hell and Heaven 1st (AN 10.211)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Dasakanipātapāḷi
Pañcamapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Karajakāyavaggo
Paṭhamanirayasaggasuttaṃ

By ten, almsmen, principles coming along together, the laying down is as brought so into hell. By which ten?

Here, almsmen, someone:

1) is attacking the breath. Gruesome, rough handling, settle down having struck and beaten, showing no sympathy in the breath of all essences.

2) is taking the not given. Therefor what is of others, others their provisions and properties, either gone from village or gone from forest, is therefor taken; as the taken up is recognised as theft.

3) is wrongly conducting with lusts. That she guarded by mother, guarded by father, guarded by mother and father, guarded by brothers, guarded by sisters, guarded by relatives, guarded by the family, guarded by principle of her husband is rendered liable to punishment, nearby also when encircled with chaplet or garland, underwent a conduct like that with that form.

4) is falsely theorizing. Gone to a council, gone to an assembly, gone to the middle of relatives, gone to a guild, gone to the middle of royals brought face to face and asked: 'Come, look here man, what you familiarizes, may you say that', Either not familiar he says 'I am familiar' or familiar he says 'I am not familiar', or not seeing he says 'I do see', or seeing he says 'I do not see'. Thus for the reason of one self, or for the reason of others, or for the reason of sports, he is aware of the falsehood from the talk.

5) is gossiping. Having heard from here he tells there of them, for the breaking up, or having heard of them there he tells of them, for the breaking up. Thus for breaking up or of the united or of the broken, benefitting the fondness in groups, enjoyment in groups, joy in groups. The speech from the talk is for making groups.

6) is abusive in speech. What he speeches is from testosterone, rough, bitter to others, scolding all round, bordering on hostility. The speech from the talk is having a form like that, without leading to concentration.

7) is deceptively wording. Theorizing untimely, theorizing not about the essence, theorizing for unsettlement, theorizing without principles, theorizing without discipline. The speech from the talk is with non-situational hedging, not by the time, without arguments. Unlimited hedging, put together for unsettlement.

8) is avaricious. Therefor what from others is others's their provisions and properties therefor he is avaricious: 'Lo! what is of the other, therefor may it exist for me'

9) is angry minded. Intellectually wicked of attitude: 'these beings or let them be killed, or let them be bounded, or let them be annihilated, or let them perish, or do not let them become.'

10) is of wrong view. A distorted vision: 'Not exists the given, not exists the sacrificed, not exists the offered, not exists fruitfully ripening of well done and badly done actions, not exists this world, not exists the other world, not exists mother, not exists father, not exists beings from spontaneous attainment, not exists in the world recluses and clergymen having rightly gone, having rightly opposed, having realised, who publicise having acquainted by one's own and this world and the other world.'

OK by these, almsmen, ten principles coming along together, the laying down is as brought so into hell.

By ten, almsmen, principles coming along together, the laying down is as brought so into heaven. By which ten?

Here, almsman, someone:

1) is giving up attacking the breath, the abstaining is from attacking the breaths. Laid down sticks, laid down lances, conscientious dwells compassionate to the fallen, toasting to the welfare of all essences.

2) is giving up taking the not given, the abstaining is from taking the not given. Therefor what is of others, others their provisions and properties, either gone from village or gone from forest, is therefor not taken; as the taking up is recognised as theft.

3) is giving up the wrong conduct on lust, the abstaining is from wrong conduct on lusts. That she guarded by mother, guarded by father, guarded by mother and father, guarded by brothers, guarded by sisters, guarded by relatives, guarded by the family, guarded by principle of her husband is rendered liable to punishment, nearby also when encircled with chaplet or garland, not underwent a conduct like that with that form.

4) is giving up falsely theorising, the abstaining is from false theories. Gone to a council, gone to an assembly, gone to the middle of relatives, gone to a guild, gone to the middle of royals brought face to face and asked: 'Come, look here man, what you familiarizes, may you say that', Either not familiar he says 'I am familiar' or familiar he says 'I am not familiar', or not seeing he says 'I do see', or seeing he says 'I do not see'. Thus for the reason of one self, or for the reason of others, or for the reason of sports, he is aware of the falsehood from the talk.

5) is giving up gossiping, the abstaining is from gossiping speech. Having heard from here he not tells there of them for the breaking up, or there having heard of them there, he tells no falsehood for the breaking up. Thus or for consolidating of the broken or for keeping together, benefitting the fondness in unity, enjoyment in unity, joy in unity. The speech from the talk is for making unity.

6) is giving up abusive speech, the abstaining is from abusive speech. Whatever the speech that is not silty, happy to the ear, heading to the heart, gracious to the population, appealing to the population; the speech from the talk is having a form like that.

7) is giving up deceptively wording, the abstaining is from deceptive wording. Theorizing timely, theorizing about the essence, theorizing for settlement, theorizing with principles, theorizing with discipline. The speech from the talk is with situational hedging, by the time, with arguments. Limited hedging, put together for settlement.

8) is not avaricious. Therefor what from others is other's their provisions and properties therefor he is not avaricious: 'Lo! what is of the other, therefor may it exist for me'

9) is not angry minded. Not intellectually wicked of attitude: 'These beings may they become not hostile, not angry, may they not kill, may they maintain themselves happy'.

10) is of right view. Not a distorted vision: 'Exists the given, exists the sacrificed, exists the offered, exists fruitfully ripening of well done and badly done action, exists this world, exists the other world, exists mother, exists father, exists beings from spontaneous attainment, exists in the world recluses and clergyman having rightly gone, having rightly opposed, having realised, who publicise having acquainted by one's own and this world and the other world.'

OK by these, almsmen, ten principles coming along together, the laying down is as brought so into heaven.

Mass of Timber (AN 6.41)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Dārukkhandhasuttaṃ

So I learned:

On one occasion senior Sāriputta dwells at Rājagaha, at Vulture's Peak Mountain. OK then senior Sāriputta on a forenoon occasion, having got dressed, having taken up bowl plus robe, together with many almsman from Vulture's Peak Mountain, descended when he saw in a certain spot a great mass of timber. Viewing it, he addressed the almsmen:

'Do you not see, Messrs, that great mass of timber?'

'Just, Mr'

'When desiring, Messrs, a proficient almsman, with mental mastery, could direct that mass of timber thus to just earth. Of what is that the reason? It exist, Messrs, the aspect of earthiness in that mass of timber relying on what a proficient almsman, with mental mastery, could direct that mass of timber thus to just earth.

When desiring, Messrs, a proficient almsman, with mental mastery, could direct that mass of timber thus to just fluidity, to just heat, to just turbulence, to just attractive, to just unattractive. Of what is that the reason? It exits, Messrs, in that mass of timber, the aspect of fluidity, the aspect of heat, the aspect of turbulence, the aspect of attractive, the aspect of unattractive relying on what a proficient almsman, with mental mastery, could direct that mass of timber thus to just fluidity, to just heat, to just turbulence, to just attractive, to just unattractive.'

Masses (SN 22.48)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Khandhavaggo
Khandhasaṃyuttaṃ
Attadīpavaggo
Khandhasuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

'I shall point out, almsmen, five masses and five masses plus the taking up. Hear that.

And which, almsmen, five masses?

Whatever, almsmen, form, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, this is called the mass of form.

Whatever, almsmen, feeling, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, this is called the mass of feeling.

Whatever, almsmen, perception, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, this is called the mass of perception.

Whatever, almsmen, inclinations, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, this is called the mass of inclinations.

Whatever, almsmen, cognition, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, this is called the mass of cognition.

These are called, almsmen, the five masses.

And which, almsmen, five masses plus the taking up?

Whatever, almsmen, form, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, is uptakable with draining; this is called the mass of form plus the taking up.

Whatever, almsmen, feeling, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, is uptakable with draining; this is called the mass of feeling plus the taking up.

Whatever, almsmen, perception, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, is uptakable with draining; this is called the mass of perception plus the taking up.

Whatever, almsmen, inclinations, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, is uptakable with draining; this is called the mass of inclinations plus the taking up.

Whatever, almsmen, cognition, past, not yet come, current, or inner or outer, or gross or subtle, or low or high, what is in the distant or in the vicinity, is uptakable with draining; this is called the mass of cognition plus the taking up.

These are called, almsmen, the five masses plus the taking up.'

Masses (SN 56.13)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Mahāvaggo
Saccasaṃyuttaṃ
Khandhasuttaṃ

'These four, almsmen, noble truths. Which four?

1. Suffering as a noble truth.
2. Rise of suffering as a noble truth.
3. Cessation of suffering as a noble truth.
4. The path heading for the cessation of suffering as a noble truth.

And which, almsmen, suffering as a noble truth?

'The five masses plus the taking up' is to this to be voiced, viz. the mass of form plus the taking up, the mass of feeling plus the taking up, the mass of perception plus the taking up, the mass of inclinations plus the taking up, the mass of cognition plus the taking up. This is called, almsmen, suffering as a noble truth.

And which, almsmen, rise of suffering as a noble truth?

This what is longing, the welcoming of this and that gone together with joy and passion, is of a following becoming viz. longing for lust, longing for becoming, longing for non-becoming. This is called, almsmen, rise of suffering as a noble truth.

And which, almsmen, cessation of suffering as a noble truth?

What just of that longing, is the without a remainder from dispassion plus cessation, the abandoning, relinquishment, release, the unnesting. This is called, almsmen, cessation of suffering as a noble truth.

And which, almsmen, the path heading for the cessation of suffering as a noble truth?

Just this noble eight-membered way, viz. right view, right attitude, right speech, right doing, right way of life, right exertion, right meditation, right concentration. This is called, almsmen, the path heading for the cessation of suffering as a noble truth.

OK these, almsmen, are four noble truths. Therefore, almsmen, 'This, the suffering' is the exertion to be made. 'This, the rise of suffering' is the exertion to be made. 'This, the cessation of suffering' is the exertion to be made. 'This, the path heading for the cessation of suffering' is the exertion to be made.'

Meditative (SN 47.2)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Mahāvaggo
Satipaṭṭhānasaṃyuttaṃ
Ambapālivaggo
Satisuttaṃ

At one occasion the exalted one dwells at Ambapāli's Grove at Vesāli. OK there the exalted one addressed the almsmen:

'Almsmen'

Those almsmen replied to the exalted one:

'Venerable Sir'

The exalted one said this:

'Meditative, almsmen, aware, an almsman should dwell. This is our instruction to you.

And how, almsmen, is an almsman meditative?

Here, almsmen, an almsman looking into body dwells in body as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; looking into feelings dwells in feelings as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; looking into mind dwells in mind as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; looking into principles dwells in principles as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world. OK so, almsmen, is an almsman meditative.

And how, almsmen, is an almsman aware?

Here, almsmen, an almsman when walking to and fro, he is doing it aware; when watching over, watching around, he is doing it aware; when stretching, bending, he is doing it aware; when carrying an overlay plus bowl plus robe, he is doing it aware; when eating, drinking, consuming, tasting, he is doing it aware; when defecating and urinating, he is doing it aware; when going, standing, sitting, sleeping, wakening, talking, being silent, he is doing it aware. OK so, almsmen, is an almsman doing it aware.

Meditative, almsmen, aware an almsman should dwell. This is our instruction to you.'

Meditative (SN 47.35)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Mahāvaggo
Satipaṭṭhānasaṃyuttaṃ
Ananussutavaggo
Satisuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

'Meditative, almsmen, aware, an almsman should dwell. This is our instruction to you.

And how, almsmen, is an almsman meditative?

Here, almsmen, an almsman looking into body dwells in body as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; looking into feelings dwells in feelings as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; looking into mind dwells in mind as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world; looking into principles dwells in principles as the ardent aware meditator would be disciplining avarice plus discontentment about the world. OK so, almsmen, is an almsmen meditative.

And how, almsmen, is an almsman aware?

Here, almsmen, feelings to an almsman he found out as they arise, he found out as they do attend, he found out as they go on as a cloud in settlement; thoughts he found as they arise, he found as they do attend, he found as they go on as a cloud in settlement; perceptions he found as they arise, he found as they do attend, he found out as they go on as a cloud in settlement. OK so, almsmen, is an almsman aware.

Meditative, almsmen, aware, an almsman should dwell. This is our instruction to you.'

Moḷiyaphagguna (SN 12.12)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Nidānavaggo
Nidānasaṃyuttaṃ
Buddhavaggo
Moḷiyaphaggunasuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

'These four, almsmen, are foods of the essence, or for the state of beings seeking to appear or for the upkeep.

Which four?

Edible food or gross or subtle, touch second, willpower third, cognition fourth. OK these, almsmen, four are foods of the essence, or for the state of beings seeking to appear or for the upkeep.'

When said so, senior Moḷiyaphagguna said this to the exalted one:

'OK now what, venerable, feeds on the food of cognition?'

The exalted one said:

'Not a sound question, I did not say 'feeds on'. If I would have said 'feeds on' to there the question 'OK now what, venerable, feeds on?' is sound. And I did not say so. Not saying so, what one should ask me is so: 'OK now of what, venerable, is cognition the food?' this is a sound question. There the explanation is sound. The food of cognition is the support, the stretching forth, of the production towards a following becoming. On that essence being, hexad-base. With support of hexad-base, touch.'

'OK now what, venerable, touches?'

The exalted one said:

'Not a sound question, I did not say 'touches'. If I would have said 'touches' to there the question 'OK now what, venerable, touches?' is sound. And I did not say so. Not saying so, what one should ask me is so: 'OK now with support of what, venerable, touch?' this is a sound question. There the explanation is sound. With support of hexad-base, touch. With support of touch, feeling.

'OK now what, venerable, gets to feel?'

The exalted one said:

'Not a sound question, I did not say 'gets to feel'. If I would have said 'gets to feel' to there the question 'OK now what, venerable, gets to feel?' is sound. And I did not say so. Not saying so, what one should ask me is so: 'OK now with support of what, venerable, feeling?' this is a sound question. There the explanation is sound. With support of touch, feeling. With support of, feeling, longing.

'OK now what, venerable, longs?'

The exalted one said:

'Not a sound question, I did not say 'longs'. If I would have said 'longs' to there the question 'OK now what, venerable, longs?' is sound. And I did not say so. Not saying so, what one should ask me is so: 'OK now with support of what, venerable, longing?' this is a sound question. There the explanation is sound. With support of feeling, longing. With support of longing, taking up.'

'OK now what, venerable, takes up?'

The exalted one said:

'Not a sound question, I did not say 'takes up'. If I would have said 'takes up' to there the question 'OK now what, venerable, takes up?' is sound. And I did not say so. Not saying so, what one should ask me is so: 'OK now with support of what, venerable, taking up?' this is a sound question. There the explanation is sound. With support of longing, taking up. With support of taking up, becoming. With support of becoming, birth. With support of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest appear. So for this entire mass of suffering the rise is.'

However, Phagguna, without a remainder from dispassion plus cessation of the six's base for touch, cessation of touch. With cessation of touch, cessation of feeling. With cessation of feeling, cessation of longing. With cessation of longing, cessation of taking up. With cessation of taking up, cessation of becoming. With cessation of becoming, cessation of birth. With cessation of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest cease. So for this entire mass of suffering the cessation is.'

Noble Way (AN 10.145)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Dasakanipātapāḷi
Tatiyapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Ariyavaggo
Ariyamaggasuttaṃ

'I shall point out to you, almsmen, a principle: and a noble way and an ignoble way. Hear that, pay attention well, I shall talk.

And which, almsmen, ignoble way?

Wrong view, wrong attitude, wrong speech, wrong doing, wrong way of life, wrong effort, wrong meditation, wrong concentration, wrong knowledge, wrong emancipation.

This is called, almsmen, ignoble way.

And which, almsmen, noble way?

Right view, right attitude, right speech, right doing, right way of life, right effort, right meditation, right concentration, right knowledge, right emancipation.

This is called, almsmen, noble way.'

Noble Way (AN 10.189)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Dasakanipātapāḷi
Catutthapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Ariyamaggavaggo
Ariyamaggasuttaṃ

'I shall point out to you, almsmen, and a noble way and an ignoble way. Hear that, pay attention well, I shall talk.

And which, almsmen, ignoble way?

Attacking the breath, taking the not given, wrong conduct on lusts, false theorization, gossip, abusive speech, deceptive wording, avarice, anger, wrong view.

This is called, almsmen, ignoble way.

And which, almsmen, noble way?

Refrainment from attacking the breath, refrainment from taking the not given, refrainment from wrong conduct on lusts, refrainment from false theorization, refrainment from gossip, refrainment from abusive speech, refrainment from deceptive wording, refrainment from avarice, refrainment from anger, refrainment from wrong view.

This is called, almsmen, noble way.'

Not Exists (SN 24.5)

Natthidinnasuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

'OK now, almsmen, when what exists, taking it up as what, settling into what, does such view arises:

'Not exists the given, not exists the sacrificed, not exists the offered, not exists fruitfully ripening of well done and badly done actions, not exists this world, not exists the other world, not exists mother, not exists father, not exists beings from spontaneous attainment, not exists in the world recluses and clergymen having rightly gone, having rightly opposed, having realised, who publicise having acquainted by one's own and this world and the other world. This man is of four great essences, when he does his time, the earthiness of the body forwards along, goes down along, the earthiness; the fluidity of the body forwards along, goes down along, the fluidity; the heat of the body forwards along, goes down along, the heat; the turbulence of the body forwards along, goes down along, the turbulence; the strengths join the air. With the bier as fifth the men, having received the death one, they go. They are to be fathomed as far as the cemetery grounds. Pale bones they have become. The offerings crumbled; this what is a gift, the stupid declared. For those vain, falsely, idle, theories of existence they say whatever; and the fool, and the wise, from the breaking up of the body are annihilated, they perish; from death they are no further'?'

'Our principles are, venerable, rooted in the exalted one, guided by the exalted, have the exalted one as resort. As good custom, venerable, may the exalted one just so illuminate the settlement of this talk. Having heard from the exalted one the almsmen will endorse it.'

'OK when form, almsmen, exists taking it up as form, settling into form, such view arises:

'Not exists the given ... from death they are no further.'

... feeling ... perception ... inclinations ... cognition ...

OK what is it that you deem, almsmen, is form or stable or unstable?'

'Unstable, venerable.'

'What is yet unstable, is that or sufferingly or happily?'

'Sufferingly, venerable.'

'What is yet unstable, sufferingly, the principle for change, therefor also now without taking it up, would such view arise:

'Not exists the given .... from death they are no further'?'

'As for this not, venerable.'

... feeling ... perception ... inclinations ... cognition ...

Also this what is the view, learned, deemed, cognised, reached, searched, thought out by the intellect, is that also or stable or unstable?

'Unstable, venerable.'

'What is yet unstable, is that or sufferingly or happily?'

'Sufferingly, venerable.'

'What is yet unstable, sufferingly, the principle for change, therefor now also without taking it up, would such view arise:

'Not exists the given .... from death they are no further'?'

'As for this not, venerable.'

'OK from what, almsmen, for the hearer of what is noble, and the doubt about these standings is given up, the doubt also about suffering is given up, the doubt also about the path heading for the cessation of suffering is given up. This is called, almsmen, the hearer of what is noble, the stream-undergoer, bound to the principle without a downfall, with enlightenment as final goal.'

Not of You (SN 12.37)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Nidānavaggo
Nidānasaṃyuttaṃ
Kaḷārakhattiyavaggo
Natumhasuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

'This is not, almsmen, the body of you, also not of others'. This former, almsmen, action is to be viewed as arranged, intended, to be felt. OK there, almsmen, having learned, the hearer of what is noble pays attention well, properly, to just the dependent-co-arising:

> Thus when this exist, this is;
> with the arising of this, this arises.
> When this not exist, this is not;
> with the cessation of this, this ceases.

This what is:

With support of not knowing, almsmen, inclinations. With support of inclinations, cognition. With support of cognition, name plus form. With support of name plus form, hexad-base. With support of hexad-base, touch. With support of touch, feeling. With support of feeling, longing. With support of longing, taking up. With support of taking up, becoming. With support of becoming, birth. With support of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest appear. So for this entire mass of suffering the rise is.

Just then, without a remainder from dispassion plus cessation of not knowing, cessation of inclinations. With cessation of inclinations, cessation of cognition. With cessation of cognition, cessation of name plus form. With cessation of name plus form, cessation of hexad-base. With cessation of hexad-base, cessation of touch. With cessation of touch, cessation of feeling. With cessation of feeling, cessation of longing. With cessation of longing, cessation of taking up. With cessation of taking up, cessation of becoming. With cessation of becoming, cessation of birth. With cessation of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest cease. So for this entire mass of suffering the cessation is.'

Not what would be considered (AN 4.77)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Catukkanipātapāḷi
Dutiyapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Apaṇṇakavaggo
Acinteyyasuttaṃ

'These four, almsman, are not what would be considered; they not should be considered. Who is a considerator of this is a shareholder of madness, of vexation.

Which four?

For the ones awakened, almsmen, the realm of awakening is not what would be considered; it not should be considered. Who is a considerator of this is a shareholder of madness, of vexation.

For the ones radiating, almsmen, the realm of radiance is not what would be considered; it not should be considered. Who is a considerator of this is a shareholder of madness, of vexation.

The ripening the action has, almsman, is not what would be considered; it not should be considered. Who is a considerator of this is a shareholder of madness, of vexation.

Considerations about the world, almsmen, are not what would be considered; it not should be considered. Who is a considerator of this, is a shareholder of madness, of vexation.

OK these, almsmen, four are not what would be considered; they not should be considered. Who is a considerator of this, is a shareholder of madness, of vexation.'

Obstacles, Obstructions (SN 46.38)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Mahāvaggo
Bojjhaṅgasaṃyuttaṃ
Nīvaraṇavaggo
Āvaraṇanīvaraṇasuttaṃ

These five, almsmen, are obstacles, obstructions, stains of mind, for making it difficult for wisdom to be powerful.

Which five?

Interest in lust, almsman, is an obstacle, an obstruction, a stain of mind, for making it difficult for wisdom to be powerful. Anger, almsman, is an obstacle, an obstruction, a stain of mind, for making it difficult for wisdom to be powerful. Apathy plus lethargy, almsman, is an obstacle, an obstruction, a stain of mind, for making it difficult for wisdom to be powerful. Excitement plus brooding, almsman, is an obstacle, an obstruction, a stain of mind, for making it difficult for wisdom to be powerful. Unclarity, almsman, is an obstacle, an obstruction, a stain of mind, for making it difficult for wisdom to be powerful. OK these, almsmen, five are obstacles, obstructions, stains of mind, for making it difficult for wisdom to be powerful.

These seven, almsmen, members of enlightenment are not obstacles, not obstructions, not stains of mind, for cultivated, for made a lot of, they lead to realisation of the fruits knowing plus emancipation.

Which seven?

Meditation as member of enlightenment, almsmen, is not an obstacle, not an obstruction, not a stain of mind, for cultivated, for made a lot of, it lead to realisation of the fruits knowing plus emancipation. Discernment of principles as member of enlightenment ... Vigour as member of enlightenment ... Pleasantness as member of enlightenment ... Relaxation as member of enlightenment ... Concentration as member of enlightenment ... Objectiveness as member of enlightenment, almsmen, is not an obstacle, not an obstruction, not a stain of mind, for cultivated, for made a lot of, it lead to realisation of the fruits knowing plus emancipation. OK these, almsmen, seven members of enlightenment are not obstacles, not obstructions, not a stain of mind, for cultivated, for made a lot of, they lead to realisation of the fruits knowing plus emancipation.

On what, almsmen, occasion a hearer of what is noble is genuine paying attention, having collected together all of mind, lend an ear, hears the principle, for this the five obstructions on that occasion are not. The seven members of enlightenment on that occasion are going to pour over by cultivation.

Which five obstructions on that occasion are not?

The obstruction of interest in lust on that occasion is not, the obstruction of anger on that occasion is not, apathy plus lethary on that occasion is not, excitement plus brooding on that occasion is not, unclarity on that occasion is not. For this the five obstructions on that occasion are not.

Which seven members of enlightenment on that occasion are going to pour over by cultivation?

Meditation as member of enlightenment on that occasion is going to pour over by cultivation. Discernment of principles as member of enlightenment on that occasion is going to pour over by cultivation. Vigour as member of enlightenment on that occasion is going to pour over by cultivation. Pleasantness as member of enlightenment on that occasion is going to pour over by cultivation. Relaxation as member of enlightenment on that occasion is going to pour over by cultivation. Concentration as member of enlightenment on that occasion is going to pour over by cultivation. Objectiveness as member of enlightenment on that occasion is going to pour over by cultivation. These seven members of enlightenment on that occasion are going to pour over by cultivation.

On what, almsmen, occasion a hearer of what is noble is genuine paying attention, having collected together all of mind, lend an ear, hears the principle, for this the five obstructions on that occasion are not. These seven members of enlightenment on that occasion are going to pour over by cultivation.

One Principle (SN 54.1)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Mahāvaggo
Ānāpānasaṃyuttaṃ
Ekadhammavaggo
Ekadhammasuttaṃ

Situated at Sāvatthi.

OK, there … said this:

'One principle, almsmen, when cultivated, when made a lot of, is great of fruit, great of benefit. Which one principle?

Meditation on the in breathe plus out breathe.

And from cultivated how, almsmen, from made a lot of how, is meditation on the in breathe plus out breathe great of fruit, great of benefit?

Here, almsmen, an almsman gone to a forest or gone to the root of a tree, or gone to an empty home, having folded a seat he sits down, aspiring to straighten the body, peripherally attending the meditation.

He either meditative breathes in, or meditative breathes out.

Or while breathing in long fathoms 'long, I'll breathe in', or while breathing out long fathoms 'long, I'll breathe out'. Or while breathing in short fathoms 'short, I'll breathe in', or while breathing out short fathoms 'short, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while experiencing all body, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing all body, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while relaxing inclinations for body, I'll breathe in', trains 'while relaxing inclinations for body, I'll breathe out'.

Trains 'while experiencing pleasantness, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing pleasantness, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while experiencing happiness, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing happiness, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while experiencing inclinations for mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing inclinations for mind, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while relaxing inclinations for mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while relaxing inclinations for mind, I'll breathe out'.

Trains 'while experiencing mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while experiencing mind, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while gratifying mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while gratifying mind, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while concentrating mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while concentrating mind, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while emancipating mind, I'll breathe in', trains 'while emancipating mind, I'll breathe out'.

Trains 'while looking into unstableness, I'll breathe in', trains 'while looking into unstableness, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while looking into dispassion, I'll breathe in', trains 'while looking into dispassion, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while looking into cessation, I'll breathe in', trains 'while looking into cessation, I'll breathe out'. Trains 'while looking into relinquishment, I'll breathe in', trains 'while looking into relinquishment, I'll breathe out'.

OK when cultivated so, almsmen, when made a lot of so, meditation on the in breathe plus out breathe is great of fruit, great of benefit.'

Path (SN 12.3)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Nidānavaggo
Nidānasaṃyuttaṃ
Buddhavaggo
Paṭipadāsuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

'I shall point out to you, almsmen, and a wrong path and a right path. Hear that, pay attention well, I shall talk.'

OK, so those almsmen replied to the exalted one:

'Venerable'

The exalted one said this:

'And which, almsmen, wrong path?

With support of not knowing, almsmen, inclinations. With support of inclinations, cognition. With support of cognition, name plus form. With support of name plus form, hexad-base. With support of hexad-base, touch. With support of touch, feeling. With support of feeling, longing. With support of longing, taking up. With support of taking up, becoming. With support of becoming, birth. With support of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest appear. So for this entire mass of suffering the rise is.

This is called, almsmen, wrong path.

And which, almsmen, right path?

However, without a remainder from dispassion plus cessation of not knowing, cessation of inclinations. With cessation of inclinations, cessation of cognition. With cessation of cognition, cessation of name plus form. With cessation of name plus form, cessation of hexad-base. With cessation of hexad-base, cessation of touch. With cessation of touch, cessation of feeling. With cessation of feeling, cessation of longing. With cessation of longing, cessation of taking up. With cessation of taking up, cessation of becoming. With cessation of becoming, cessation of birth. With cessation of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest cease. So for this entire mass of suffering the cessation is.

This is called, almsmen, right path.'

Penetrative (AN 6.63)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Dutiyapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Mahāvaggo
Nibbedhikasuttaṃ

'I shall point out to you, almsmen, a penetrative course, a course on principles. Hear that, pay attention well, I shall talk.'

OK, so those almsmen replied to the exalted one:

'Venerable'

The exalted one said this:

'And which is that, almsmen, penetrative course, course on principles?

Lusts, almsmen, should be recognised. Of lusts the situation for appearing should be recognised, of lusts the difference should be recognised, of lusts the ripening should be recognised. The cessation of lusts should be recognised. The path heading for the cessation of lusts should be recognised.

Feelings, almsmen, should be recognised. Of feelings the situation for appearing should be recognised, of feelings the difference should be recognised, of feelings the ripening should be recognised. The cessation of feelings should be recognised. The path heading for the cessation of feelings should be recognised.

Perceptions, almsmen, should be recognised. Of perceptions the situation for appearing should be recognised, of perceptions the difference should be recognised, of perceptions the ripening should be recognised. The cessation of perceptions should be recognised. The path heading for the cessation of perceptions should be recognised.

Drains, almsmen, should be recognised. Of drains the situation for appearing should be recognised, of drains the difference should be recognised, of drains the ripening should be recognised. The cessation of drains should be recognised. The path heading for the cessation of drains should be recognised.

Action, almsmen, should be recognised. Of actions the situation for appearing should be recognised, of actions the difference should be recognised, of actions the ripening should be recognised. The cessation of action should be recognised. The path heading for the cessation of action should be recognised.

Suffering, almsmen, should be recognised. Of suffering the situation for appearing should be recognised, of suffering the difference should be recognised, of suffering the ripening should be recognised. The cessation of suffering should be recognised. The path heading for the cessation of suffering should be recognised.'

'Lusts, almsmen, should be recognised. Of lusts the situation for appearing should be recognised, of lusts the difference should be recognised, of lusts the ripening should be recognised. The cessation of lusts should be recognised. The path heading for the cessation of lusts should be recognised', OK thus this yet was said:

'And what was this said depending on? These five, almsmen, strings to lust: Forms to be cognised by sight, agreeable, gracious, appealing, dear forms, to be dyed to put together with lust. Sounds to be cognised by hearing ... Scents to be cognised by smell ... Flavours to be cognised by taste ... To be touched to be cognised by body, agreeable, gracious, appealing, dear forms, to be dyed to put together with lust. OK but also, almsmen, these are not the lusts, in the discipline of what is noble they are called this name 'strings to lust'.

Passional attitude is mans' lust.
Not these are the lusts, what are the colourings in the world.
Passional attitude is mans' lust.
The colourings they stand in the world just so,
but here the firm they discipline the interest.

And which is, almsmen, of lusts the situation for appearing? Touch is, almsmen, of lusts the situation for appearing. And which is, almsmen of lusts the difference? Another is, almsmen, lust upon forms, another is lust upon sounds, another is lust upon scents, another is lust upon tastes, another is lust upon to be touched. This is called, almsmen, of lusts the difference. And which is, almsmen, of lusts the ripening? OK what, almsmen, one is lusting for, like this, like that, an individual produces or a share in merit, or a share in demerit. This is called, almsmen, of lusts the ripening. And which is, almsmen, the cessation of lusts? Cessation of touch is, almsmen, the cessation of lusts. Just this noble eight-membered way is the path heading for the cessation of lusts, viz. right view, right attitude, right speech, right doing, right way of life, right exertion, right meditation, right concentration. OK from what, almsmen, the hearer of what is noble so fathoms lusts, so fathoms of lusts the situation for appearing, so fathoms of lusts the difference, so fathoms of lusts the ripening, so fathoms the cessation of lusts, so fathoms the path heading for the cessation of lusts. He fathoms this penetrative clergy conduct, the cessation of lusts. 'Lusts, almsmen, should be recognised ... The path heading for the cessation of lusts should be recognised', thus therefor what was said, depending on this here it was said.'

'Feelings, almsmen, should be recognised ... The path heading for the cessation of feelings should be recognised', OK thus this yet was said:

'And what is this said depending on? These three, almsmen, feelings: feelings of happiness, feelings of suffering, feelings of neither happiness nor suffering. And which is, almsmen, of feelings the situation for appearing? Touch is, almsmen, of feelings the situation for appearing. And which is, almsmen of feelings the difference? Feelings of happiness of the flesh, almsmen, exist; feelings of happiness not of the flesh exist; feelings of suffering of the flesh exist; feelings of suffering not of the flesh exist; feelings of neither happiness nor suffering of the flesh exist; feelings of neither happiness nor suffering not of the flesh exist. This is called, almsmen, of feelings the difference. And which is, almsmen, of feelings the ripening? OK what is, almsmen, being felt like this, like that, the individual produces or a share in merit, or a share in demerit. This is called, almsmen, the ripening of feelings. And which is, almsmen, the cessation of feelings? Cessation of touch is, almsmen, the cessation of feelings. Just this noble eight-membered way is the path heading for the cessation of feelings, viz. right view ... right concentration, OK from what, almsmen, the hearer of what is noble so fathoms feelings, so fathoms of feelings the situation for appearing, so fathoms of feelings the difference, so fathoms of feelings the ripening, so fathoms the cessation of feelings, so fathoms the path heading for the cessation of feelings. He fathoms this penetrative clergy conduct, the cessation of feelings. 'Feelings, almsman, should be recognised ... The path heading for the cessation of feelings should be recognised', thus therefor what was said, depending on this here it was said.'

'Perceptions, almsmen, should be recognised ... The path heading for the cessation of perceptions should be recognised', OK thus this yet was said:

'And what depending on was it said? These six, almsmen, perceptions: perception of forms, perception of sounds, perception of scents, perception of tastes, perception of to be touched, perception of principles. And which is, almsmen, of perceptions the situation for appearing? Touch is, almsmen, of perceptions the situation for appearing. And which is, almsmen, of perceptions the difference? Another is, almsmen, perceptions upon forms, another is perceptions upon sounds, another is perceptions upon scents, another is perceptions upon tastes, another is perceptions upon to be touched, another is perceptions upon principles. This is called, almsmen, of perceptions the difference. And which is, almsmen, of perceptions the ripening? Ripeness in expression is, almsmen, perception I say. Whatever one perceives like that and like that one expresses: 'So I perceived'. This is called, almsmen, of perception the ripening. And which is, almsmen, the cessation of perceptions? Cessation of touch is, almsmen, the cessation of perceptions. Just this noble eight-membered way is the path heading for the cessation of feelings, viz. right view ... right concentration, OK from what, almsmen, the hearer of what is noble so fathoms perception, so fathoms of perceptions the situation for appearing, so fathoms of perceptions the difference, so fathoms of perceptions the ripening, so fathoms the cessation of perceptions, so fathoms the path heading for the cessation of perceptions. He fathoms this penetrative clergy conduct, the cessation of perceptions. 'Perceptions, almsman, should be recognised ... The path heading for the cessation of perceptions should be recognised', thus therefor what was said, depending on this here it was said.'

'Drains, almsmen, should be recognised ... The path heading for the cessation of drains should be recognised' was said, OK thus this yet was said:

'And what depending on was it said? These three, almsmen, drains: the drain of lust, the drain of becoming, the drain of not knowing. And which is, almsmen, of drains the situation for appearing? Not knowing is, almsmen, of drains the situation for appearing. And which is, almsmen, of drains the difference? The drains that led one to go to hell, almsmen, exist; the drains that led one to go to the animal domain exist; the drains that led one to go to the realm of ghosts exist; the drains that led one to go to the world of humans exist; the drains that led one to go to the world of gods exist. This is called, almsmen, of drains the difference. And which is, almsmen, of drains the ripening? OK what, almsmen, is coming from not knowing, like this, like that, the individual produces or a share in merit, or a share in demerit. This is called, almsmen, of drains the ripening. And which is, almsmen, the cessation of drains? Cessation of not knowing is, almsmen, the cessation of drains. Just this noble eight-membered way is the path heading for the cessation of drains, viz. right view ... right concentration, OK from what, almsmen, the hearer of what is noble so fathoms drains, so fathoms of drains the situation for appearing, so fathoms of drains the difference, so fathoms of drains the ripening, so fathoms the cessation of drains, so fathoms the path heading for the cessation of drains. He fathoms this penetrative clergy conduct, the cessation of drains. 'Drains, almsman, should be recognised ... The path heading for the cessation of drains should be recognised', thus therefor what was said, depending on this here it was said.'

'Action, almsmen, should be recognised ... The path heading for the cessation of actions should be recognised' was said, OK thus this yet was said:

'And what depending on was it said? Herewith intention, almsmen, the action I say. Intending the action one does by body, by speech, by intellect. And which is, almsmen, of actions the situation for appearing? Touch is, almsmen, of actions the situation for appearing. And which is, almsmen, of actions the difference? Action to be felt in hell, almsmen, exist; action to be felt in the animal domain exist; action to be felt in the ghost realm exist; action to be felt in the world of humans exist; action to be felt in the world of gods exist. This is called, almsmen, of actions the difference. And which is, almsmen, of actions the ripening? Triply, almsmen, is the ripening of actions I say. Or viewed in principle, or at the arise, or more in due course. This is called, almsmen, of actions the ripening. And which is, almsmen, the cessation of actions? Cessation of not knowing is, almsmen, the cessation of actions. Just this noble eight-membered way is the path heading for the cessation of actions, viz. right view ... right concentration, OK from what, almsmen, the hearer of what is noble so fathoms actions, so fathoms of actions the situation for appearing, so fathoms of actions the difference, so fathoms of actions the ripening, so fathoms the cessation of actions, so fathoms the path heading for the cessation of actions. He fathoms this penetrative clergy conduct, the cessation of actions. 'Actions, almsman, should be recognised ... The path heading for the cessation of actions should be recognised', thus therefor what was said, depending on this here it was said.'

'Suffering, almsmen, should be recognised. Of suffering the situation for appearing should be recognised, of suffering the dif- ference should be recognised, of suffering the ripening should be recognised. The cessation of suffering should be recognised. The path heading for the cessation of suffering should be recognised', OK thus this yet was said:

'And what was this said depending on? also birth is sufferingly, also ageing is sufferingly, also sickness is sufferingly, also death is sufferingly, also grief, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest are sufferingly, also wishing what one not acquires that also is sufferingly. In short, the five masses plus the taking up are sufferingly. And which is, almsmen, of suffering the situation for appearing? Longing is, almsmen, of suffering the situation for appearing. And which is, almsmen, of suffering the difference? Extreme suffering, almsmen, exist; trifling suffering exist; slow in dispassion exist; quick in dispassion exist. This is called, almsmen, of suffering the difference. And which is, almsmen, of suffering the ripening? Here, almsmen, where someone overwhelmed by suffering, with the mind exhausted, grieves, discontentmentes, laments, beats the chest, bewails, undergoes bewilderment, or where yet overwhelmed by suffering, with the mind exhausted, undergoes an quest outside: 'Who fathoms a verse or two for this suffering's cessation?' Ripenesss in bewilderment, a cartload, almsmen, is suffering I say, or fully ripening in quest. This is called, almsmen, of suffering the ripening. And which is, almsmen, the cessation of suffering? Cessation of longing is, almsmen, the cessation of suffering. Just this noble eight-membered way it the path heading for the cessation of suffering, viz. right view, right attitude, right speech, right doing, right way of life, right exertion, right meditation, right concentration, from what, almsmen, a hearer of what is noble so fathoms suffering, so fathoms of suffering the situation for appearing, so fathoms of suffering the difference, so fathoms of suffering the ripening, so fathoms the cessation of suffering, so fathoms the path heading for the cessation of suffering. He fathoms this penetrative clergy conduct, the cessation of suffering. 'Suffering, almsmen, should be recognised. Of suffering the situation for appearing should be recognised, of suffering the difference should be recognised, of suffering the ripening should be recognised. The cessation of suffering should be recognised. The path heading for the cessation of suffering should be recognised', thus therefor what was said, depending on this here it was said.'

OK this is it, almsmen, a penetrative course on a course on principles.'

Restraint (AN 4.14)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Catukkanipātapāḷi
Paṭhamapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Caravaggo
Saṃvarasuttaṃ

'These four, almsmen, strivings.

Which four?

1. Restraint as striving.
2. Rejection as striving.
3. Cultivation as striving.
4. Preservation as striving.

And which, almsmen, restraint as striving?

Here, almsmen, an almsman, viewing form by sight, is not a holder of indications, not a holder of details, by reason of which there to, the strength of sight abiding unrestrained, he would befall to avarice plus discontentment, evil, unwholesome principles. To restrain that he goes against, he guards against, the strength of sight. The strength of sight undergoes the restraint. Hearing a sound by hearing ... Smelling a scent by smell ... Tasting a flavour by with taste ... Touching a to be touched by body ... Having cognised a principle by intellect ... This is called, almsmen, restrains as striving.

And which, almsmen, rejection as striving?

Here, almsmen, an almsman not endures, gives up, dispels, eradicates, obliterates arisen lustful thoughts ... arisen angry thoughts ... arisen harmful thoughts ... whichever arisen evil, unwholesome principles. This is called, almsmen, rejection as striving.

And which, almsmen, cultivation as striving?

Here, almsmen, an almsman cultivates meditation as member of enlightenment, relying on withdrawal, relying on dispassion, relying on cessation, resulting in waivering. discernment of principles as member of enlightenment ... vigour as member of enlightenment ... pleasantness as member of enlightenment ... relaxation as member of enlightenment ... concentration as member of enlightenment ... objectiveness as member of enlightenment ... This is called, almsmen, cultivation as striving.

And which, almsmen, preservation as striving?

Here, almsmen, an almsman preserves an arisen suitable indication of concentration: the perception of a skeleton, the perception of a maggot infested cadaver, the perception of a discoloured cadaver, the perception of a festering cadaver, the perception of a fissured cadaver, the perception of a bloated cadaver. This is called, almsmen, preservation as striving.

OK these, almsmen, are the four strivings.'

'And restraint and rejection, cultivation, preservation these four strivings are pointed out by the Kinsman of the Sun
by which the here ardent almsman ought to reach the barrenness of suffering'

Rise (SN 47.42)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Mahāvaggo
Satipaṭṭhānasaṃyuttaṃ
Samudayasuttaṃ

I shall point out, almsmen, of the four attendances of meditation and the rise and the settling down. Hear that.

And what, almsmen, is the rise for body? With rise of food, rise of body; with cessation of food, settling down of body. With rise of touch, rise of feelings; with cessation of touch, settling down of feelings. With rise of name plus form, rise of mind; with cessation of name plus form, settling down of mind. With rise of attention, rise of principles; with cessation of attention, settling down of principles.'

Sāriputta and Koṭṭika 1st (SN 44.3)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Saḷāyatanavaggo
Abyākatasaṃyuttaṃ
Paṭhamasāriputtakoṭṭhikasuttaṃ

On one occasion and senior Sāriputta and senior Mahākoṭṭhika dwell at the deer park at Isipatana, at Bārānasi. OK then senior Mahakoṭṭhika, on an evening occasion, returned from seclusion approached there where senior Sāriputta was. Having approached senior Sāriputta they greeted together. Having exchanged the cordial howdy greet he sat down at one end. OK, at one end seated senior Mahākoṭṭhika said this to senior Sāriputta:

'OK what now, Mr Sāriputta, is the Tathāgata from death further?'

'OK this is not made forward, Mr, by the exalted one 'The Tathāgata is from death further'.'

'What yet Mr, is not the Tathāgata from death further?'

'Also this, Mr, is not made forward by the exalted one 'The Tathāgata is not from death further'.'

'OK what now, Mr, and is and is not the Tathāgata from death further?'

'OK this is not made forward, Mr, by the exalted one 'The Tathāgata and is and is not from death further'.'

'Yet Mr what, neither is nor is not the Tathāgata from death further?'

'Also this, Mr, is not made forward by the exalted one 'The Tathāgata neither is nor is not from death further'.'

'OK what now, Mr, 'Is the Tathāgata from death further?' thus being asked, 'OK this is not made forward, Mr, by the exalted one 'The Tathāgata is from death further" you say ... re ... OK now what, Mr, is the root, what is the support, by which this is not made forward by the exalted one?'

'Is the Tathāgata from death further' OK, Mr, this is about gone form. 'Is not the Tathāgata from death further' this is about gone form. 'And is and is not the Tathāgata from death further' this is about gone form. 'Neither is nor is not the Tathāgata from death further' this is about gone form. 'Is the Tathāgata from death further' OK, Mr, this is about gone feeling ... this is about gone perception ... this is about gone inclinations ... this is about gone cognition. OK this is, Mr, the root, this the support, by which this is not made forward by the Tathāgata.'

Scope (AN 4.233)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Catukkanipātapāḷi
Pañcamapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Kammavaggo
Vitthārasuttaṃ

These four, almsmen, actions, myself acquainting with, realising, are by me publicised. Which four?

1. It exists, almsmen, action dark, dark ripening.
2. It exists, almsmen, action bright, bright ripening.
3. It exists, almsmen, action dark and bright, dark and bright ripening.
4. It exists, almsmen, action not dark and not bright, not dark and not bright ripening, it leads to the barrenness of action.

And which, almsmen, action dark, dark ripening?

Here, almsmen, someone arranges inclination by body with angriness, arranges inclination by speech with angriness, arranges inclination by intellect with angriness. He, arranging inclination by body with angriness, arranging inclination by speech with angriness, arranging inclination by intellect with angriness, arise a world with angriness. That with this world being arisen with angriness, touches touch with angriness. He being touched with a touch with angriness, gets to feel feeling with angriness; the one end with suffering. Also as those beings of purgatory. This is called, almsmen, action dark, dark ripening.

And which, almsmen, action bright, bright ripening?

Here, almsmen, someone arranges inclination by body without angriness, arranges inclination by speech without angriness, arranges inclination by intellect without angriness. He, arranging inclination by body without angriness, arranging inclination by speech without angriness, arranges inclination by intellect without angriness, arise a world without angriness. That with this world being arisen without angriness, touches touch without angriness. He being touched with a touch without angriness, gets to feel feeling without angriness; the one end with happiness. Also as those Subhakiṇhā gods. This is called, almsmen, action bright, bright ripening.

And which, almsmen, action dark and bright, dark and bright ripening?

Here, almsmen, someone arranges inclination by body and with angriness and without angriness, arranges inclination by speech and with angriness and without angriness, arranges inclination by intellect and with angriness and without angriness. He, arranging inclination by body and with angriness and without angriness, arranging inclination by speech and with angriness and without angriness, arranging inclination by intellect and with angriness and without angriness, arise a world and with angriness and without angriness. That with this world being arisen with angriness and without angriness, touches touch with angriness and without angriness. He being touched with a touch also with angriness also without angriness, gets to feel feeling also with angriness also without angriness; the mix with happiness plus suffering. Also as that from some humans and some gods and some belonging to purgatory. This is called, almsmen, action dark and bright, dark and bright ripening.

And which, almsmen, action not dark and not bright, not dark and not bright ripening, it leads to the barrenness of actions?

There, almsmen, what this action dark, dark ripening is, whatever the intention, for that the rejection. What this action bright, bright ripening is, whatever the intention, for that the rejection. What this action dark and bright, dark and bright ripening is, whatever the intention, for that the rejection. This is called, almsmen, action not dark and not bright, not dark and not bright ripening, it leads to the barrenness of action.

OK these, almsmen, four actions, myself acquainting with, realising, are by me publicised.

Seven Aspects (SN 14.11)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Nidānavaggo
Dhātusaṃyuttaṃ
Dutiyavaggo
Sattadhātusuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

'These seven, almsmen, aspects. Which seven?

The aspect of light, the aspect of attractiveness, the aspect of endless air as base, the aspect of endless cognition as base, the aspect of objectlessness as base, the aspect of neither perception nor no perception as base, the aspect of cessation of perception of the felt. OK these, almsmen, are seven aspects.'

So said, a certain almsman said this to the exalted one:

'And this what is, venerable, the aspect of light, and what is the aspect of attractiveness, and what is aspect of endless air as base and what is the aspect of endless cognition as base, and what is the aspect of objectlessness as base, and what is the aspect of neither perception nor no perception as base, and what is the aspect of cessation of perception of the felt, OK now these, venerable, the aspects, depending on what are they to be fathomed?'

'This what is, almsmen, the aspect of light, this aspect is fathomed depending on darkness. This what is, almsman, the aspect of attractiveness, this aspect is fathomed depending on unattractiveness. This what is, almsmen, the aspect of endless air, this aspect is fathomed depending on form. This what is, almsmen, the aspect of endless cognition as base, this aspect is fathomed depending on endless air as base. This what is, almsmen, the aspect of objectlessness, this aspect is fathomed depending on endless cognition as base. This what is, almsmen, the aspect of neither perception nor no perception, this aspect is fathomed depending on objectlessness as base. This what is, almsmen, the aspect of cessation of perception of the felt, this aspect is fathomed depending on cessation.'

'And this what is, venerable, the aspect of light, and what is the aspect of attractiveness, and what is the aspect of endless air as base and what is the aspect of endless cognition as base, and what is the aspect of objectlessness as base, and what is the aspect of neither perception nor no perception as base, and what is the aspect of cessation of perception of the felt, OK now these, venerable, the aspects, how is the engagement to be reached?'

'And this what is, almsman, the aspect of light, and what is the aspect of attractiveness, and what is the aspect of endless air as base, and what is the aspect of endless cognition as base, and what is the aspect of objectlessness as base, these aspects are to be reached through engagement with perception. This what is, almsmen, the aspect of neither perception nor no perception as base, this aspect is to be reached through engagement with the little remaining inclination. This what is, almsmen, the aspect of cessation of perception of the felt, this aspect is to be reached through engagement with cessation.'

Situation 1st (AN 3.112)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Tatiyapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Sambodhavaggo
Paṭhamanidānasuttaṃ

'These three are, almsmen, situations for the rise of actions.

Which three?

Greed is a situation for the rise of actions, hate is a situation for the rise of actions, delusion is a situation for the rise of actions.

What, almsmen, action is made with greed, is greed-borne, is situated with greed, the rise is with greed, that action is unwholesome, that action is blameable, that action has a sufferable ripening. That action does lead to the rise of action, that action does not lead to the cessation of action.

What, almsmen, action is made with hate, is hate-borne, is situated with hate, the rise is with hate, that action is unwholesome, that action is blameable, that action has a sufferable ripening. That action does lead to the rise of action, that action does not lead to the cessation of action.

What, almsmen, action is made with delusion, is delusion-borne, is situated with delusion, the rise is with delusion, that action is unwholesome, that action is blameable, that action has a sufferable ripening. That action does lead to the rise of action, that action does not lead to the cessation of action.

OK these are, almsmen, three situations for the rise of actions.

These three are, almsmen, situations for the rise of actions.

Which three?

Without greed is a situation for the rise of actions, without hatred is a situation for the rise of actions, without delusion is a situation for the rise of actions.

What, almsmen, action is made without greed, is without greed-borne, is situated without greed, the rise is without greed, that action is wholesome, that action is unblameable, that action has a happy ripening. That action does lead to the cessation of action, that action does not lead to the rise of action.

What, almsmen, action is made without hatred, is without hate-borne, is situated without hate, the rise is without hate, that action is wholesome, that action is unblameable, that action has a happy ripening. That action does lead to the cessation of action, that action does not lead to the rise of action.

What, almsmen, action is made without delusion, is without delusion-borne, is situated without delusion, the rise is without delusion, that action is wholesome, that action is unblameable, that action has a happy ripening. That action does lead to the cessation of action, that action does not lead to the rise of action.

OK these are, almsmen, three situations for the rise of actions.'

Spike (SN 36.6)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Saḷāyatanavaggo
Vedanāsaṃyuttaṃ
Sagāthāvaggo
Sallasuttaṃ

'Not having learned, almsmen, the commoner gets to feel a feeling also happily, gets to feel a feeling also sufferingly, gets to feel a feeling also neither happily nor sufferingly. In this, almsmen, what is the distinction, what is the peculiarity, what is making the difference for the learned hearer of what is noble with the not learned commoner?'

'Our principles are, venerable, rooted in the exalted one...'

'Not having learned, almsmen, the commoner being touched by a feeling to suffer grieves, is in misery, wails, beats the chest, laments, gets into bewilderment. He gets to feel two feelings: and a bodily and a mental. Also as that, almsmen, a man would be pierced with a spike that with this, along the piercing, he would be pierced with a second spike. For so, almsmen, that man gets to feel the feeling by two spikes. OK just so, almsmen, not having learned the commoner being touched by a feeling to suffer grieves, is in misery, wails, beats the chest, laments, undergoes bewilderment. He gets to feel two feelings: and a bodily and a mental. OK just of that, yet while being touched by a feeling to suffer, friction is. That with this, with a feeling to suffer, the frictional; what to a feeling to suffer the dormancy of friction is, that is dormant. He, being touched by a feeling to suffer, welcomes the happiness by lust.

Of what is that the reason?

For he, almsmen, doesn't fathom, the commoner has not learned the departure of a feeling to suffer otherwise from the happiness by lust. For that and with the happiness by lust he has been pleased. What by a feeling to be happy the dormancy of passion is, that is dormant. He essentially does not fathom and the rise, and the settling down, and the sweetness, and the wretchedness, and the departure of those feelings. For he essentially not fathomed and the rise, and the settling down, and the sweetness, and the wretchedness, and the departure of those feelings, what to a feeling neither happily nor sufferingly the dormancy of not knowing is that is dormant. That if he gets to feel a feeling happily, he gets to feel this linked. If he gets to feel a feeling sufferingly, he gets to feel this linked. If he gets to feel a feeling neither happily nor sufferingly, he gets to feel this linked. This is called, almsmen, 'the commoner who has not learned: linked with birth, with ageing, with death, with sorrow, with lamentation, with suffering, with discontentment, with unrest; linked to suffering' I say.

OK and having learned, almsmen, the hearer of what is noble being touched by feeling to suffer grieves not, is not in misery, wails not, not beats the chest, laments not, not undergoes bewilderment; he gets to feel one feeling: bodily, not mental. Also as that, almsmen, a man would be pierced with a spike. That with this, after the piercing, he would not be pierced with a second spike. For so, almsmen, that man gets to feel the feeling by one spike. OK just so, almsmen, having learned the hearer of what is noble being touched by a feeling to suffer grieves not, is not in misery, wails not, not beats the chest, laments not, not undergoes bewilderment; he gets to feel one feeling: bodily, not mental. OK just of that, yet while being touched by a feeling to suffer, friction is not. That with this, with a feeling to suffer, the frictionless; what to a feeling to suffer the dormancy of friction is, that is not dormant. He, being touched by a feeling to suffer, does not welcome the happiness by lust.

Of what is that the reason?

For he, almsmen, does fathom, the hearer of what is noble has learned the departure of a feeling to suffer otherwise from the happiness by lust. For that he has not been welcoming the happiness by lust; what by a feeling to be happy the dormancy of passion is, that is not dormant. He essentially does fathom and the rise, and the settling down, and the sweetness, and the wretchedness, and the departure of those feelings. For he essentially fathomed and the rise, and the settling down, and the sweetness, and the wretchedness, and the departure of those feelings, what to a feeling neither happily nor sufferingly the dormancy of not knowing is, that is not dormant. That if he gets to feel a feeling happily, he gets to feel this unlinked. If he gets to feel a feeling sufferingly, he gets to feel this unlinked. If he gets to feel a feeling neither happily nor sufferingly, he gets to feel this unlinked. This is called, almsmen, 'the hearer of what is noble who has learned: unlinked with birth, with ageing, with death, with sorrow, with lamentation, with suffering, with discontentment, with unrest; unlinked to suffering' I say.

OK this, almsmen, is the distinction, this is the peculiarity, this is making the difference for the learned hearer of what is noble with the not learned commoner.'

The wise gets to feel no feeling, also happily also sufferingly, also he learned a lot.
And this, of the steadfast with the commoner,
is the great distinction of wholesomeness.

For having learned a lot, having recognised the principle, understood this world and further.
With wanted principles the mind does not shake, with the unwanted no friction comes.

For those compliances and/or non-compliances are scattered, they are gone; not 'they are'.
And the step having familiarized the stainless, sorrowless, he rightly does fathom having gone across of becoming.

Successive Cessations (AN 9.31)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Navakanipātapāḷi
Paṭhamapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Sattāvāsavaggo
Anupubbanirodhasuttaṃ

'These nine, almsmen, are successive cessations. Which nine?

1. First radiance, when engaged in, lust perception has ceased.
2. Second radiance, when engaged in, thoughts plus thinking have ceased.
3. Third radiance, when engaged in, pleasantness has ceased.
4. Forth radiance, when engaged in, breathing in plus breathing out have ceased.
5. Endless air as base, when engaged in, perception of form has ceased.
6. Endless cognition as base, when engaged in, perception of endless air as base has ceased.
7. Objectlessness as base, when engaged in, perception of endless cognition as base has ceased.
8. Neither perception nor no perception as base, when engaged in, perception of objectlessness as base has ceased.
9. Cessation of perception of the felt, when engaged in, and perception and feeling have ceased.

OK these, almsmen, are nine successive cessations.'

Suffering (SN 12.43)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Nidānavaggo
Nidānasaṃyuttaṃ
Dukkhasuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

'I shall point out, almsmen, of suffering and the rise and the settling down. Hear that, pay attention well, I shall talk.'

OK, so those almsmen replied to the exalted one:

'Venerable'

The exalted one said this:

'And which, almsmen, of suffering the rise?

Depending on and sight and forms arises cognition by sight. The going together of the three is the touch. With support of touch, feeling. With support of feeling, longing. OK this, almsmen, is of suffering the rise. Depending on hearing and sound arises cognition by hearing ... Depending on and smell and scents arises cognition by smell ... Depending on and taste and flavour arises cognition by taste ... Depending on and body and to be touched arises cognition by to be touched ... Depending on and intellect and principles arises cognition by intellect. The going together of the three is the touch. With support of touch, feeling. With support of feeling, longing. OK this, almsmen, is of suffering the rise.

And which, almsmen, of suffering the settling down?

Depending on and sight and forms, arises cognition by sight. The going together of the three is the touch. With support of touch, feeling. With support of feeling, longing. Without a remainder from dispassion plus cessation of just that longing, cessation of taking up. With cessation of taking up, cessation of becoming. With cessation of becoming, cessation of birth. With cessation of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest cease. So for this entire mass of suffering the cessation is. OK this, almsmen, is of suffering the settling down.

Depending on and hearing and sounds arises cognition by hearing ... Depending on and smell and scents arises cognition by smell ... Depending on and taste and flavours arises cognition by taste ... Depending on and body and to be touched arises cognition by to be touched ... Depending on and intellect and principles arises cognition by intellect. The going together of the three is the touch. With support of touch, feeling. With support of feeling, longing. Without a remainder from dispassion plus cessation, of just that longing, cessation of taking up. With cessation of taking up, cessation of becoming. With cessation of becoming, cessation of birth. With cessation of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest cease. So for this entire mass of suffering the cessation is. OK this, almsmen, is of suffering the settling down.'

Taking up (SN 12.52)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Nidānavaggo
Nidānasaṃyuttaṃ
Dukkhavaggo
Upādānasuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

'On uptakable, almsmen, principles; from dwelling looking at the sweetness, longing grows. With support of longing, taking up. With support of taking up, becoming. With support of becoming, birth. With support of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest appear. So for this entire mass of suffering the rise is.

Also as that, almsmen, of ten cartloads of wood or twenty cartloads of wood or thirty cartloads of wood or forty cartloads of wood a great mass of fire would burn. There a man, from time to time, would put in and like dried up grass, and he would put in dried up dung, and he would put in dried up wood. So for it, almsmen, that food, that taking up, the great mass of fire would burn lasting a long time. OK just so, almsmen, on uptakable principles; from dwelling looking at the sweetness, longing grows. With support of longing, taking up. With support of taking up, becoming. With support of becoming, birth. With support of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest arise. So for this entire mass of suffering the rise is.

On uptakable, almsmen, principles; from dwelling looking at the wretchedness, longing ceases. With cessation of longing, cessation of taking up. With cessation of taking up, cessation of becoming. With cessation of becoming, cessation of birth. With cessation of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest cease. So for this entire mass of suffering the cessation is.

Also as that, almsmen, of ten cartloads of wood or twenty cartloads of wood or thirty cartloads of wood or forty cartloads of wood a great mass of fire would burn. There a man, not from time to time would put in dry grass, and like not would put in dry dung, and not would put in dry wood. So indeed, almsmen, the great mass of fire, and earlier taking up for consummation and for another, offering no food would cease. OK just so, almsmen, on uptakable principles; from dwelling looking at the wretchedness, longing ceases. With cessation of longing, cessation of taking up. With cessation of taking up, cessation of becoming. With cessation of becoming, cessation of birth. With cessation of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest cease. So for this entire mass of suffering the cessation is.'

The Eastern Gatehouse (SN 48.44)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Mahāvaggo
Indriyasaṃyuttaṃ
Jarāvaggo
Pubbakoṭṭhakasuttaṃ

So I learned:

On one occasion the exalted one dwells at the eastern gatehouse, at Sāvatthi. OK, there the exalted one addressed senior Sāriputta:

'Do you believe, Sāriputta, the strength of confidence, cultivated, made a lot of, is immersed in immortality. Immortality is the relief; immortality fulfils the stopping. The strength of vigour ... meditation ... concentration ... wisdom ...

'OK I don't go here, venerable, to the exalted one for confidence: the strength of confidence cultivated, made a lot of, is immersed in immortality, immortality is the relief, immortality fulfils the stopping. The strength of vigour ... meditation ... concentration ... wisdom ... As for this for whom, venerable, it has not been familiarized, not viewed, not found out, not realised, not touched by wisdom, there one would go to others for this confidence: the strength of confidence cultivated, made a lot of, is immersed in immortality, immortality is the relief, immortality fulfils the stopping. The strength of vigour ... meditation ... concentration ... wisdom ... OK and for those that, venerable, familiarized, viewed, found out, realised, touched by wisdom, there one without doubt has the reliance: the strength of confidence cultivated, made a lot of, is immersed in immortality, immortality is the relief, immortality fulfils the stopping. The strength of vigour ... meditation ... concentration ... wisdom ... OK and for me this, venerable, has been familiarized, found out, realised, touched by wisdom, there I without doubt have the reliance: the strength of confidence cultivated, made a lot of, is immersed in immortality, immortality is the relief, immortality fulfils the stopping. The strength of vigour ... meditation ... concentration ... wisdom ...'

'Good, good, Sāriputta, so for whoever, Sāriputta, it has not been familiarized, not viewed, not found out, not realised, not touched by wisdom, there those would go to others for this confidence: the strength of confidence cultivated, made a lot of, is immersed in immortality, immortality is the relief, immortality fulfils the stopping. The strength of vigour ... meditation ... concentration ... wisdom ... OK and of those that, Sāriputta, familiarized, found out, realised, touched by by wisdom, there they without doubt have the reliance: the strength of confidence cultivated, made a lot of, is immersed in immortality; immortality is the relief, immortality fulfils the stopping. The strength of vigour cultivated, made a lot of, is immersed in immortality; immortality is the relief, immortality fulfils the stopping. The strength of meditation cultivated, made a lot of, is immersed in immortality; immortality is the relief, immortality fulfils the stopping. The strength of concentration cultivated, made a lot of, is immersed in immortality; immortality is the relief, immortality fulfils the stopping. The strength of wisdom cultivated, made a lot of, is immersed in immortality; immortality is the relief, immortality fulfils the stopping.'

The Eastern Park I (SN 48.45)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Mahāvaggo
Indriyasaṃyuttaṃ
Paṭhamapubbārāmasuttaṃ

So I learned:

On one occasion the exalted one dwells at the eastern park Migāramātupāsāda, at Sāvatthi. OK, there the exalted one addressed the almsmen:

'OK now, almsmen, from the cultivation, making a lot of, of how many strengths, the drains barren, an almsman answers another: 'I fathom birth is barren, the clergy conduct spent, done is what ought to be done, no further gain of presence'?'

'Our principles are, venerable, rooted in the exalted one, guided by the exalted, have the exalted one as resort. As good custom, venerable, may the exalted one just so illuminate the settlement of this talk. Having heard from the exalted one the almsmen will endorse it.'

'OK, almsmen, from the cultivation, from making a lot of, of one strength, the drains barren, an almsman answers another: 'I fathom birth is barren, the clergy conduct spent, done is what ought to be done, no further gain of presence'. Of which one? Of the strength of wisdom; from wisdom, almsmen, for the hearer of what is noble confirmation then accordingly coincides; vigour then accordingly coincides; meditation then accordingly coincides; concentration then accordingly coincides. OK for this, almsmen, from the cultivation, making a lot of, of one strength, the drains barren, an almsman answers another: 'I fathom birth is barren, the clergy conduct spent, done is what ought to be done, no further gain of presence'.'

This Shining Mind (AN 1.51-52)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Ekakanipātapāḷi
Accharāsaṅghātavaggo

AN 1.51

'This shining, almsmen, mind. OK and that stained from visiting stains, that not having learned the commoner essentially does not fathom. From that not having learned, I say 'cultivation of mind does not exist for the commoner'.'

AN 1.52

'This shining, almsmen, mind. OK and that cleared from visiting stains, that having learned the hearer of what is noble essentially does fathom. From that having learned, I say 'cultivation of mind does exist for the hearer of what is noble'.'

Timbaruka (SN 12.18)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Nidānavaggo
Nidānasaṃyuttaṃ
Āhāravaggo
Timbarukasuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

OK, then Timbaruka the wanderer approached there where the exalted one was. Having approached the exalted one they greeted together. Having exchanged the cordial howdy greet he sat down at one end. OK, at one end seated the wanderer Timbaruka said this to the exalted one:

'OK now what, dear Gotama, are happiness plus suffering made by one's own?'

'Not for so, Timbaruka' said the exalted one.

'Yet what, dear Gotama, are happiness plus suffering made by others?'

'Not for so, Timbaruka' said the exalted one.

'OK now what, dear Gotama, are happiness plus suffering, and made by one's own and made by others?'

'Not for so, Timbaruka' said the exalted one.

'Yet what, dear Gotama, are happiness plus suffering, a fortuitous engagement, not made by one's own, not made by others?'

'Not for so, Timbaruka' said the exalted one.

'OK now what, dear Gotama, do happiness plus suffering not exist?'

'OK not, Timbaruka, do happiness plus suffering not exist, OK

Timbaruka, happiness plus suffering do exist.'

'By that, for the exalted Gotama is not familiar with, does not see, happiness plus suffering?'

'OK I not, Timbaruka, am not familiar, do not see, happiness plus suffering. OK I am familiar, Timbaruka, with happiness plus suffering; OK I do see, Timbaruka, happiness plus suffering.'

'OK now what, dear Gotama, 'happiness plus suffering are made by one's own', thus being asked 'Not for so, Timbaruka' you say. 'Yet what, dear Gotama, happiness plus suffering are made by others', thus being asked 'Not for so, Timbaruka' you say. 'OK now what, dear Gotama, happiness plus suffering are made by others', thus being asked 'Not for so, Timbaruka' you say. 'Yet what, dear Gotama, is happiness plus suffering a fortuitous engagement, not made by one's own, not made by others?', thus being asked 'Not for so, Timbaruka' you say. 'OK what now, dear Gotama, do happiness plus suffering not exit?', thus being asked 'OK not, Timbaruka, do happiness plus suffering not exist; OK it exist, Timbaruka, happiness plus suffering' you say. 'By that, for the exalted Gotama is not familiar with, does not see, happiness plus suffering?', thus being asked 'OK I not, Timbaruka, am not familiar, do not see, happiness plus suffering. OK I am familiar with, Timbaruka, happiness plus suffering' OK I do see, Timbaruka, happiness plus suffering' you say. And may you Gotama disclose to me happiness plus suffering, and may you Gotama point out to me happiness plus suffering.'

'That feeling one feels', OK Timbaruka, existing as if from the beginning: 'made by one's own is the happiness plus suffering', such I did also not say. 'Another feeling, one another feels', OK Timbaruka, existing as if struck by feeling: 'made by others is the happiness plus suffering', such I did also not say. These are for you, Timbaruka, the both ends having to go by; the Tathāgata points out the principle by the middle:

With support of not knowing, inclinations. With support of inclinations, cognition. With support of cognition, name plus form.

With support of name plus form, hexad-base. With support of hexad-base, touch. With support of touch, feeling. With support of feeling, longing. With support of longing, taking up. With support of taking up, becoming. With support of becoming, birth. With support of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest appear. So for this entire mass of suffering the rise is.

However, without a remainder from dispassion plus cessation of not knowing, cessation of inclinations. With cessation of inclinations, cessation of cognition. With cessation of cognition, cessation of name plus form. With cessation of name plus form, cessation of hexad-base. With cessation of hexad-base, cessation of touch. With cessation of touch, cessation of feeling. With cessation of feeling, cessation of longing. With cessation of longing, cessation of taking up. With cessation of taking up, cessation of becoming. With cessation of becoming, cessation of birth. With cessation of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest cease. So for this entire mass of suffering the cessation is.'

So said, Timbaruko the wanderer said this to the exalted one: 'Excellent, dear Gotama .... I am seeking refuge; I go to Gotama the exalted one, and the principle, and the order of almsmen. I the follower, have you Gotama for endorser, from this day on while endowed with breath, as the refuge gone to.'

To be Concluded (SN 1.3)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Devatāsaṃyuttaṃ
Upanīyasuttaṃ

Situated at Sāvatthi.

OK, stood at one end she, a goddess, said in the vicinity of the exalted one this verse:

> 'It is to be concluded, life is short-lived.
> Concluded to ageing, no shelters exist.
> Beholding this fear in death,
> one should make merits bringing happiness.'

'It is to be concluded, life is short-lived.
Concluded to ageing, no shelters exist.
Beholding this fear in death,
one should give up the world's bait appeasing the behold.'

To be Viewed (SN 36.5)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Saḷāyatanavaggo
Vedanāsaṃyuttaṃ
Sagāthāvaggo
Daṭṭhabbasuttaṃ

'These three, almsmen, feelings. Which three? Feelings of happiness, feelings of suffering, feelings of neither happiness nor suffering.

Feelings of happiness, almsmen, are to be viewed as from suffering; feelings of suffering are to be viewed as from a spike; feelings of neither happiness nor suffering are to be viewed as from unstableness.

OK from what, almsmen, to an almsman the feeling of happiness is it is viewed as from suffering; the feeling of suffering is viewed as from a spike; the feeling of neither happiness nor suffering is viewed as from unstableness. This is called, almsmen, an almsman who rightly saw. He cut out longing, turned down the yoke, by the right comprehension of esteem he made an end of suffering.'

What is happiness he did view from suffering, suffering he did view from a spike;
neither happiness nor suffering existing,
he did view from unstableness;
surely he, the almsman who rightly saw,
comprehends feelings.

He, the feelings comprehending, had viewed, in principle, the drainless;
after the breaking up of the body, the principle set;
having the revelation, he can not come to reckoning.

Two Happinesses (AN 2.66)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Dukanipātapāḷi
Dutiyapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Sukhavaggo

'These two, almsman, happinesses. Which two?

And happiness by lust, and happiness by abstinence. OK these, almsmen, are two happinesses.

This is the summit, almsmen, of these two happinesses, this what is the happiness by abstinence.'

Two Powers (AN 2.13)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Dukanipātapāḷi
Adhikaraṇavaggo

'These two, almsmen, powers.

Which two?

And the power of calculation and the power of cultivation.

And which, almsmen, power of calculation?

Here, almsmen, someone thus regularly reflects: 'OK for conducting badly by body, evil ripening is viewed and like in principle and along the nearby plus further; OK for conducting badly by speech, evil ripening is viewed and like in principle and along the nearby plus further; OK for conducting badly by intellect, evil ripening is viewed and like in principle and along the nearby plus further.' Thus he is calculating giving up conducting badly by body, cultivates conducting well by body; giving up conducting badly by speech, cultivates conducting well by speech; giving up conducting badly by intellect, cultivates conducting well by intellect; he maintains himself cleanly.

This is called, almsmen, the power of calculation.

And which, almsmen, power of cultivation?

Here, almsmen, an almsmen is just withdrawing from lusts, withdrawing from unwholesome principles, with thoughts with thinking, withdrawal-borne the pleasantness plus happiness, he dwells having obtained the first radiance.

From the ease of thoughts plus thinking, inner serenity, determination of mind, without thoughts without thinking, concentration-borne the pleasantness plus happiness, he dwells having obtained the second radiance.

And pleasant and objective from dispassion, he dwells meditative and aware, and the happiness with the body he does experience therefor what nobles disclose: 'An objective meditator, a happy dweller', he dwells having obtained the third radiance.

And from the rejection of happiness and from the rejection of suffering, from the heading to rest of the just prior contentment plus discontentment, neither happily nor sufferingly, the objectiveness by the purity of meditation, he dwells having obtained the fourth radiance.

This is called, almsmen, the power of cultivation.

OK these, almsmen, two powers.'

Uncultivated (AN 1.23-24)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Ekakanipātapāḷi
Akammaniyavaggo

AN 1.23

'I don't, almsmen, regard also another one principle what uncultivated leads to such a great unsettlement as this, almsmen; the mind. The mind, almsmen, uncultivated leads to great unsettlement.'

AN 1.24

'I don't, almsmen, regard also another one principle what cultivated leads to such a great settlement as this, almsmen; the mind. The mind, almsmen, cultivated leads to great settlement.'

Upavāna (AN 4.175)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Catukkanipātapāḷi
Catutthapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Sañcetaniyavaggo
Upavāṇasuttaṃ

OK then senior Upavāṇa approached there where senior Sāriputta was. Having approached senior Sāriputta they greeted together. Having exchanged the cordial howdy greet he sat down at one end. OK, at one end seated senior Upavāṇa said this to senior Sāriputta:

'OK what now, Mr Sāriputta, is the end making by knowing?'

'Not for this one, Mr.'

What, yet Mr Sāriputta, is the end making by conduct?'

'Not for this one, Mr.'

'What, yet Mr Sāriputta, is the end making by knowing plus conduct?'

'Not for this one, Mr.'

'What, yet Mr Sāriputta, is it otherwise the end making by knowing plus conduct?'

'Not for this one, Mr.'

'OK what now, Mr Sāriputta, 'is the end making by knowing?' thus being asked, 'Not for this one, Mr' you say. What, yet Mr Sāriputta, 'is the end making by conduct?' thus being asked, 'Not for this one, Mr' you say. What, yet Mr Sāriputta, 'is the end making by knowing plus conduct?' thus being asked, 'Not for this one, Mr' you say. What, yet Mr Sāriputta, 'is it otherwise the end making by knowing plus conduct?' thus being asked, 'Not for this one, Mr'

you say. As how, yet Mr, is the end making?'

'If by knowing, Mr, the end making would be, the end making, if it would be, is being just with the taking up. If by conduct, Mr, if it would be the end making, the end making, if it would be, is being just with the taking up. If by knowing plus conduct, Mr, if it would be the end making, the end making, if it would be, is being just with the taking up. If otherwise than by knowing plus conduct, Mr, if it would be the end making, the end making, if it would be, is the commoner. For the commoner, Mr, is otherwise than by knowing plus conduct. OK lacking conduct, Mr, essentially one is not familiar, one does not see. Complete in conduct essentially one is familiar, one does see. Essentially is familiarizing, seeing, the end making.'

Uptakable (SN 22.121)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Khandhasaṃyuttaṃ
Dhammakathikavaggo
Upādāniyasuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

'I shall point out, almsmen, and the uptakable principles and the taking up. Hear that.

And which, almsmen, uptakable principles, which taking up?

Form, almsmen, an uptakable principle; what there the interest plus passion is, that there the taking up. Feeling, almsmen, an uptakable principle; what there the interest plus passion is, that there the taking up. Perception, almsmen, an uptakable principle; what there the interest plus passion is, that there the taking up. Inclinations, almsmen, an uptakable principle; what there the interest plus passion is, that there the taking up. Cognition, almsmen, an uptakable principle; what there the interest plus passion is, that there the taking up.

These are called, almsmen, uptakable principles, this the taking up.'

Vajirā (SN 5.10)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Bhikkhunīsaṃyuttaṃ
Vajirāsuttaṃ

Situated at Sāvatthi.

OK then at an occasion in the forenoon Vajirā the almswoman, having got dressed, having taken up bowl plus robe, enters Sāvatthi for a lump of food. Having walked in Sāvatthi, for a lump of food, after the meal, having gone back from receiving the lump of food, she approached there where Blind Men's Grove is for the day's dwelling. Having plunged into Blind Men's Grove she sat down at a certain root of a tree, the dwelling for the day. OK then Māra the evil one approached there where the almswoman Vajirā is, for almswoman Vajirā to arise lust, fear, the shivers, goose bumps, to drive her away through lust from concentration. Having approached the almswoman Vajirā he talks here in verse:

'By whom is this, the being, made?
Where is of the being the maker?
Where is the being risen?
Where does the being cease?'

OK then for Vajirā the almswoman it was like this: OK this verse, now who talks, is it or a human or not a human? OK then to Vajirā the almswoman it was like this: 'OK this verse, it is Māra the evil one. He talks to me to arise lust, fear, the shivers, goose bumps, to drive me away through lust from concentration.' OK then Vajirā the almswoman thus finding this is Māra the evil one, she gave a talk against the evil Māra in verses:

'Now what 'being' did you came on to,
Māra is your view gone now?
Clearly this pile of inclinations, here as inference a being is found.

For as with a combination of members,
the sound is 'chariot'.
So it is at the masses,
a being exists in consent.

For just suffering appears, suffering stands and wanes.
No other appears from suffering, not another ceases from suffering.'

OK then Māra the evil one: 'The almswoman Vajirā is familiar with me', grieved, disappointed, he vanished just there.

Vipassī (SN 12.4)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Nidānavaggo
Nidānasaṃyuttaṃ
Buddhavaggo
Vipassīsuttaṃ

At Sāvatthi.

To Vipassī, almsmen, exalted one, virtuous one, public awakened one, just prior enlightenment, for not having become widely awakened, as just this one clung to enlightenment, meditative, it was like this:

'Alas! miserable is the world, having undergone and born and age and die, and pass and arise. And then for this yo-yoing of ageing plus death when it not fathoms the departure of suffering. O when may we hail for this, when will it be fathomed, the departure of this suffering, of ageing plus death?'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what exist, ageing plus death is? With support of what, ageing plus death?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when birth exist, ageing plus death is. With support of birth, ageing plus death.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what exist, birth is? With support of what, birth?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when becoming exist, birth is. With support of becoming, birth.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what exist, becoming is? With support of what, becoming?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when taking up exist, becoming is. With support of taking up, becoming.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what exist, taking up is? With support of what, taking up?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when longing exist, taking up is. With support of longing, taking up.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what exist, longing is? With support of what, longing?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when feeling exist, longing is. With support of feeling, longing.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what exist, feeling is? With support of what, feeling?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when touch exist, feeling is. With support of touch, feeling.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what exist, touch is? With support of what, touch?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when hexad-base exist, touch is. With support of hexad-base, touch.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what exist, hexad-base is? With support of what, hexad-base?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when name plus form exist, hexad-base is. With support of name plus form, hexad-base.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what exist, name plus form is? With support of what, name plus form?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when cognition exist, name plus form is. With support of cognition, name plus form.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what exist, cognition is? With support of what, cognition?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when inclinations exist, cognition is. With support of inclinations, cognition.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what exist, inclinations are? With support of what, inclinations?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when not knowing exist, inclinations are. With support of not knowing, inclinations.'

Thus for this, with support of not knowing, inclinations. With support of inclinations, cognition. With support of cognition, name plus form. With support of name plus form, hexad-base. With support of hexad-base, touch. With support of touch, feeling. With support of feeling, longing. With support of longing, taking up. With support of taking up, becoming. With support of becoming, birth. With support of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest appear. So for this entire mass of suffering the rise is.

'The rise!, the rise!'

OK, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, into principles prior unheard of, sight arose, knowledge arose, wisdom arose, knowing arose.'

'OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment it was like this: 'OK now when what not exist, ageing plus death is not? With cessation of what, cessation of ageing plus death?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when birth not exist, ageing plus death is not. With cessation of birth, cessation of ageing plus death.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what not exist, birth is not? With cessation of what, cessation of birth?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when becoming not exist, birth is not. With cessation of becoming, cessation of birth.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what not exist, becoming is not? With cessation of what, cessation of becoming?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when taking up not exist, becoming is not. With cessation of taking up, cessation of becoming.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what not exist, taking up is not? With cessation of what, cessation of taking up?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when longing not exist, taking up is not. With cessation of longing, cessation of taking up.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what not exist, longing is not? With cessation of what, cessation of longing?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when feeling not exist, longing is not. With cessation of feeling, cessation of longing.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what not exist, feeling is not? With cessation of what, cessation of feeling?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when touch not exist, feeling is not. With cessation of touch, cessation of feeling.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what not exist, touch is not? With cessation of what, cessation of touch?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when hexad-base not exist, touch is not. With cessation of hexad-base, cessation of touch.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what not exist, hexad-base is not? With cessation of what, cessation of hexad-base?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when name plus form not exist, hexad-base is not. With cessation of name plus form, cessation of hexad-base.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what not exist, name plus form is not? With cessation of what, cessation of name plus form?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when cognition not exist, name plus form is not. With cessation of cognition, cessation of name plus form.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what not exist, cognition is not? With cessation of what, cessation of cognition?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when inclinations not exist, cognition is not. With cessation of inclinations, cessation of cognition.'

OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, it was like this: 'OK now when what not exist, inclinations are not? With cessation of what, cessation of inclinations?' OK then, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, with proper attention was the insight by wisdom: 'OK when not knowing not exist, inclinations are not. With cessation of not knowing, cessation of inclinations.'

Thus for this, with cessation of not knowing, cessation of inclinations. With cessation of inclinations, cessation of cognition. With cessation of cognition, cessation of name plus form. With cessation of name plus form, cessation of hexad-base. With cessation of hexad-base, cessation of touch. With cessation of touch, cessation of feeling. With cessation of feeling, cessation of longing. With cessation of longing, cessation of taking up. With cessation of taking up, cessation of becoming. With cessation of becoming, cessation of birth. With cessation of birth, ageing plus death, sorrow, lamentation, suffering, discontentment, unrest cease. So for this entire mass of suffering the cessation is.

'The cessation!, the cessation!'

OK, almsmen, to Vipassī, the one clung to enlightenment, into principles prior unheard of, sight arose, knowledge arose, wisdom arose, knowing arose.'

Vision for Knowledge (AN 1.45-46)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Ekakanipātapāḷi
Paṇihitācchavaggo

AN 1.45

Also as that, almsmen, pond with water, disturbed, lively, muddy of essence. That there a man, endowed with sight, stood on the shore. He would not see also shells plus oysters, also pebbles plus gravel, also shoals of fish also roaming also standing. Of what is that the reason?

The disturbance, almsmen, of water.

OK just so, almsmen, an almsman, with that manner, by disturbing the mind, or will familiarize the settlement for himself, or will familiarize the settlement for others, or will familiarize the settlement for both, or beyond the principle of men thus realise the vision for knowledge enough for the distinction of what is noble, not that position he found out. Of what is that the reason?

The disturbance, almsmen, of mind.

AN 1.46

Also as that, almsmen, pond with water, transparent, bright, not disturbed. That there a man, endowed with sight, stood on the shore. He would see also shells plus oysters, also pebbles plus gravel, also shoals of fish also roaming also staying. Of what is that the reason?

The no disturbance, almsmen, of water.

OK just so, almsmen, an almsman, with that manner, by not disturbing the mind, or will familiarize the settlement for himself, or will familiarize the settlement for others, or will familiarize the settlement for both, or beyond the principle of men thus realise the vision for knowledge enough for the distinction of what is noble, that position he found out. Of what is that the reason?

The no disturbance, almsmen, of mind.

With Thoughts plus With Thinking (SN 43.3)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Saḷāyatanavaggo
Asaṅkhatasaṃyuttaṃ
Paṭhamavaggo
Savitakkasavicārasuttaṃ

… And which, almsmen, way heading for the uninclined?

With thoughts plus with thinking, the concentration. Mere thinking without thoughts, the concentration. Without thoughts plus without thinking, the concentration.

This is called, almsmen, way heading for the uninclined. …

Wrongness (AN 10.103)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Dasakanipātapāḷi
Micchattasuttaṃ

'Wrongness, almsmen, having come to it is a defeat, not a victory. And how, almsmen, is having come to wrongness a defeat, not a victory?

For wrong view, almsmen, enables wrong attitude.
For wrong attitude, enables wrong speech.
For wrong speech enables wrong doing.
For wrong doing enables wrong way of life.
For wrong way of life enables wrong exertion.
For wrong exertion enables wrong meditation.
For wrong meditation enables wrong concentration.
For wrong concentration enables wrong knowledge.
For wrong knowledge enables wrong emancipation.

OK so, almsmen, is having come to wrongness a defeat, not a victory.

Rightness, almsmen, having come to it is a victory, not a defeat. And how, almsmen, is having come to rightness a victory, not a defeat?

For right view, almsmen, enables right attitude.
For right attitude enables right speech.
For right speech enables right doing.
For right doing enables right way of life.
For right way of life enables right exertion.
For right exertion enables right meditation.
For right meditation enables right concentration.
For right concentration enables right knowledge.
For right knowledge enables right emancipation.

OK so, almsmen, is having come to rightness a victory, not a defeat.'

Yokeable (SN 22.120)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
Khandhavaggo
Khandhasaṃyuttaṃ
Dhammakathikavaggo
Saṃyojaniyasuttaṃ

Situated at Sāvatthi.

'I shall point out, almsmen, and the yokeable principles and the yoke. Hear that.

And which, almsmen, yokeable principles, which yoke?

Form, almsmen, a yokeable principle; what there the interest plus passion is, that there the yoke. Feeling, almsmen, a yokeable principle; what there the interest plus passion is, that there the yoke. Perception, almsmen, a yokeable principle; what there the interest plus passion is, that there the yoke. Inclinations, almsmen, a yokeable principle; what there the interest plus passion is, that there the yoke. Cognition, almsmen, a yokeable principle; what there the interest plus passion is, that there the yoke.

These are called, almsmen, yokeable principles; this the yoke.'

Yokes (AN 10.13)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Dasakanipātapāḷi
Paṭhamapaṇṇāsakaṃ
Nāthavaggo
Saṃyojanasuttaṃ

'These ten, almsmen, are yokes. Which ten?

The yokes, five with a share in the downward. The yokes, five with a share in the upward.

Which yokes are the five with a share in the downward?

1. view on embodiment
2. unclarity
3. superstition
4. interest in lust
5. anger

These yokes are the five with a share in the downward.

Which yokes are the five with a share in the upward?

1. passion for form
2. passion for without form
3. esteem
4. excitement
5. not knowing

These yokes are the five with a share in the upward.

OK these, almsmen, are the ten yokes.'

III. Glossary

Pāḷi-English

Aggi fire
Ājīva way of life
Ākāsa air
Ākiñcañña objectlessness
Akkhi eye
Anattā not self
Anga member
Anicca unstable
Aññāṇa ignorance
Āpo fluidity
Arahant virtuous; virtuous one
Ariyasāvaka hearer of what is noble
Āsava drain
Avijjā not knowing
Āyatana base
Bhava becoming
Bhāvanā cultivation
Bhikkhā alms
Bhikkhu almsman
Bhikkhunī almswoman
Bhuddha awakened; awakened one
Bhūta essence (from esse 'be': become, ghost, being, result of becoming) Byāpāda anger
Caraṇa conduct
Cakkhu sight
Ceto mentality
Cetanā intention
Chanda interest
Chandarāgo interest plus passion
Citta mind
Dhamma principle
Dhātu aspect
Domanassa discontentment
Dosa hate

Dukkha suffering
Ghāna smell
Jhāna radiance
Jivha taste
Kamma action
kankhā doubt
Kaṇṇa ear
Kāma lust
Kāmacchanda interest in lust
Kāya body
Karuṇā kindness
Khandha mass
Lobha greed
Magga way
Mahābhūta great essence
Māna esteem
Manasikāra attention
Mano intellect
Manosañcetanā willpower (one of the foods to carry on)
Mettā lovingness
Micchā wrong
Moha delusion
Muditā harmony
Nāsa nose
Ñāṇa knowledge
Ñāṇadassana the vision for knowledge
Nāmarūpa name plus form
Nibbāna peace
Nidāna situation
Nimitta indication
Nīvaraṇa obstruction
Paccaya support
Pañc'upādānakkhandhā five masses plus the taking up
Parimukha peripheral
Pathavī earth
Paṭigha friction
Paṭipadā path
Phala fruit

Phassa touch
Punabbhava following becoming Rāga passion
Rasa flavour
Saddhā confidence
Sakkāya embodiment Sakkāyadiṭṭhi view on embodiment Saḷāyatana hexad-base (ṣaḍ° ordinarily chal°: see cha (=six); ṣaḍ; hextad (hĕk' săd'); hexad or sextet, indicating a group of six)
Samādhi concentration
Sammā right
Samatha calm
Sampajañña awareness (mindfulness, consciousness)
Saṃphappalāpa deceptive wording
Saṃyojana yoke
Saññā perception
Saṅkappa attitude
Saṅkhāra inclination
Sati meditation
Satipaṭṭhāna attendance of meditation
Sīla behaviour
Sīlabbata behaviour plus manner
Sīlabbataparāmāsa superstition
Somanassa contentment
Sota hearing
Sukha happiness
Suññatā emptiness
Taṇhā longing
Tejo heat
Thinamiddha apathy plus lethargy
Udaka water
Uddhaccakukkucca excitement plus brooding
Upādāna taking up
Upekkhā objectiveness
Vāta wind
Vāyo turbulence
Vedanā feeling
Vicāra thinking

Vicikiccā unclarity
Viññāṇa cognition
Vipāka ripening
Vipariṇāma change
Vipassanā understanding
Vitakka thought